WILSON GIVES HUGHES REPLY ON RAIL ISSUE

Says Strife of Labor and Capital Is Menace to the Nation.

PLEA FOR 8 HOUR LAW.

Asbury Park, N. J., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—From his porch at Shadow Lawn President Wilson today declared the eight hour railroad law had been enacted not because the railroad men demanded it but because it was right. It was the president's first political address since he accepted renomination.

Answering Republican Candidate Hughes' claim that "the facts" should have been ascertained before the bill became law, the president asserted that no facts could be ascertained until the law had been put into operation and its workings observed by the commission he is to appoint.

ANSWER TO RAILWAY HEADS.

The railroad executives, it developed from a detailed account Mr. Wilson furnished of his negotiations with them and labor heads, set up a contention similar to that of Mr. Hughes. To them the president said:

"You are asking that the result of the eight hour day be predicted and the prediction be arbitrated. You are asking for an arbitration of a conjecture, of an opinion, of a forecast, of the figures of experts based upon an entirely different experience, and if you were to ask me personally to arbitrate such a question I would say that I am not competent to arbitrate it."

REFERS TO GAS LAW.

Mr. Wilson, who talked to upward of 2,000 persons, mostly business men of his native state, headed by the New Jersey branch of the National Business Men's league, fortified his argument by reference to the 80 cent gas law passed by the New York legislature.

It was carried to the United States Supreme court on the ground that it was confiscatory legislation. The court, Mr. Wilson explained, told the gas companies: "Nobody can tell until you try to manufacture gas at 80 cents whether it is confiscatory or not."

Other points made by the president in behalf of the eight hour law were that the principle of such a law was not arbitrable, that labor is not a commodity, but "a form of coöperation"; that he asked congress to enact the law, regardless of whether either side to the controversy favored it, and that congress in the supplemental legislation to come next session would do equal justice.

PUBLIC RIGHTS IN PERIL.

"These men," said the president, referring to the railroad executives and the employes, "were dealing with one another as if the only thing to settle was between themselves, whereas the real thing to settle was what rights had the 100,000,000 people of the United States."

Mr. Wilson intimated that in the future the public, which was the "main partner" in the negotiations, would have much more to say, although in the past it had frequently been left out of reckoning.

In a passing reference to the federal reserve act the president said it had taken the shackles from the business men and "apprised you that you are no men's servants." "Reaction in this matter," he added, "would shut us up like a province."

SPEECH OF THE PRESIDENT.

President Wilson's speech in full follows:

"I need not tell you what a sense of gratification it gives me that you should come bearing this generous message when I have just heard from your chairman. There is a sense in which the business men of America represent America because America has devoted herself time out of mind to the arts and achievements of peace, and business is the organization of the energies of peace. No one who looks about upon the field of American business at the present moment can fail to realize that a new breath and spirit have come into the business of America.

"There have been times when it looked as if America were interested only in herself, but in these recent years American business men have lifted their eyes to more distant

Aged Bridegroom Taken from Wife, She Tells Police

A trembling voice from the Hotel Sherman last night informed the Central police that W. E. Henderson, wealthy president of a Cincinnati lithographers' firm, had disappeared.

"I am afraid," she said, "my husband has been kidnapped."

The Story Goes:

The police set to work and immediately got into the middle of a family mystery. From the best information obtainable, the case set up something like this:

Henderson, who is 77 years old, recently married again—his third wife. His son, W. D. Henderson Jr., 5461 Cornell avenue, and his daughter, Mrs. Daniel F. Sullivan of 826 Kenesaw terrace, are said to have disapproved the marriage with a woman much younger than himself.

The lithographer and his wife came here a week ago last Thursday to attend the national convention.

"Yes, Daddy Is Gone!"

Last night the young wife, in room 1107, was prostrated.

"Yes, daddy is gone," she said between sobs. "And I don't know where he is. I knew all along that Billy (the son) and his sister did not favor our marriage, but I didn't think it would come to this."

She said the son had called her on the telephone earlier in the day and had said he believed the father should go into some institution for a rest.

She said she demurred and asked that she be allowed to accompany her husband, but the son declined to talk further with her.

Late at night Mrs. Henderson said she had received a third telephone call from the son, saying her husband would be returned to her this morning. She was overjoyed and repeated continually:

"Oh, my daddy is coming back."

The Son's Story.

The son, when reached by telephone at his home, refused to talk of the disappearance. He was indignant when reference was made that his father had been "kidnaped," and said his father was resting at an institution.

An anonymous informant who told of the spiriting away of the aged man said that the son and another man had driven to a downtown club, had taken the elder Henderson away in an automobile, and had taken him to the offices of Dr. L. C. H. E. Zeigler, 4654 Sheridan road.

Dr. Zeigler said arrangements had been made by the son with him to have Henderson sent to a hospital and that he had made reservations at the Chicago Union hospital, but for some reason the younger Henderson and the father had not appeared. He asserted the elder Henderson is suffering from a nervous breakdown and merely in need of rest.

BRITISH WRECK TWO ZEPPELINS IN LONDON RAID

Half Hundred Battles Are Fought in Skies on the Western Front.

MANY MACHINES LOST

EUROPEAN WAR SUMMARY

One Zeppelin destroyed during raid on London; second reported to have fallen.

Russians repel German massed attacks under cover of gas near Lake Narocz; Teutons check Slav assaults in Russian Volhynia.

Russo-Roumanian forces in Dobrudja resume offensive and hammer both flanks of Mackensen's army, now reported fleeing.

British make further gains in fighting to north of Somme river.

LONDON, Sept. 24, 3 a. m.—One Zeppelin was destroyed and another is reported to have met the same fate during a raid on London and the eastern counties last night. The official report issued by Gen. Sir John French follows:

> An attack by hostile airships was made on Lincolnshire and the eastern counties and on the outskirts of London. The latter attack was made from the northeast and the southeast about midnight, and was beaten off by our anti-aircraft defenses.
> One airship was brought down in flames in the southern part of Essex, and a report has been received that another fell on the Essex coast. The latter report is unconfirmed.
> No reports of casualties or damage have yet been received.

BATTLE LIGHTS UP NIGHT.

Observers on the roofs and bridges of the city were treated to quite a pyrotechnic display of shrapnel bursting around a Zeppelin visible in the sky somewhere in the remote outskirts of London.

This spectacle was of short duration, as the Zeppelin made off, finding the reception too hot.

Distant flashes in the sky nevertheless indicated that the conflict had not yet finished, and it was an hour later—shortly after 1 o'clock in the morning—that the Associated Press observer on a city bridge saw a small cigar like object suddenly burst into a glow on the eastern horizon. There was no vivid flame lighting up the sky, as on Sept. 3, but the crowd of onlookers took it for granted that another Zeppelin had met its doom.

Considerable damage was done and there were heavy casualties, the admiralty stated in describing the operation as "highly satisfactory."

RAID BY FIFTY MACHINES.

An official report issued by the war office tonight said:

> There was great aerial activity yesterday. A highly successful raid by about fifty of our machines was carried out on an important railway junction, where much damage was done, two trains containing ammunition being destroyed and many violent explosions being caused.
> In addition many fights occurred in the air, during which three hostile machines were destroyed and five others driven to earth damaged.

FRENCH IN FIFTY-SIX BATTLES.

PARIS, Sept. 23.—French aviators took part in fifty-six air battles yesterday, bringing down ten enemy fliers, it was officially announced today.

GERMANS WIN ELEVEN FIGHTS.

BERLIN, Sept. 23.—An official statement issued tonight by the general army headquarters said:

> In aerial fighting north of the Somme we shot down eleven enemy machines.

YANKEE AIRMAN KILLED.

Winston-Salem, N. C., Sept. 23.—Kiffen Yates Rockwell, a young American who has been serving with distinction in the French aero corps on the western battle front, was killed this morning in a fight with a German aircraft. His death was announced in a cablegram from Paris received here late today by his mother, Mrs. L. A. Rockwell.

Five Cent Loaves to Cost Six Cents After Tomorrow

Smaller Dealers Decide to Follow Lead of Big Firms.

IN EXECUTIVE SESSION

Representatives of 600 small bakers of Chicago and environs met last night behind closed doors and voted to raise the price of bread to 6 cents for a standard loaf, the new price to be effective tomorrow and Tuesday.

The action of the meeting was made public by B. H. Dahlheimer, president of the Chicago Master Bakers' association.

"These 600 members, most of whom were present at the meeting," said Mr. Dahlheimer, "represent all the smaller bakeshops of the city, including those shops where one man and his family do the work. They do not include the big bakeries, which already have decided on what they are going to do. Our reason for the increase is just the same as theirs, however; it is the high cost of flour and other ingredients.

Meeting in Secret.

"The meeting was an executive one, and I think it is best not to say where it was held; it might get us into trouble. Some of the bakers in certain sections of the city will charge 7 cents per loaf, but that loaf will be a little bigger and of a little better quality than the 6 cent loaf. The 6 cent loaf will weigh between twelve and sixteen ounces."

By the first of next week, according to announcements now made, practically every bakeshop—large as well as small—in Chicago will be charging 6 cents for the loaf which has been selling for 5 cents.

Wards Lead Way.

The first company to announce an increase in the price of bread from 5 to 6 cents for the standard loaf was the Ward Baking company. The announcement has been carried on the wrappers of its bread for the last three or four days. The Schulze Baking company and H. H. Kohlsaat & Co. officials have said that they expected to make a like increase.

The federal inquiry into the cost of bread took a new angle yesterday, when Assistant District Attorney Joseph B. Fleming announced he had learned that several of the larger bakers are absorbing smaller concerns. It is understood that the Ward Baking company already has taken over several smaller bakers, and these facts are to be investigated.

HOLLAND SCHOOL ROMANCE ENDS IN GRIEF FOR GIRL.

Miss Claire Miller Tells Police She Has Found Her Marriage Was Fake—Causes Husband's Arrest.

A school romance of Holland is declared to have brought grief upon Miss Claire Miller, who yesterday caused the arrest of Thomas Dutilh, 845 Wilson avenue.

Miss Miller, or Mrs. Dutilh, as she claims, told the Clark street police that she formerly lived in Texas and met Dutilh in San Francisco. They were married, she explained, and upon receiving the blessing of the elder Dutilh, who is a merchant in Rotterdam, they were sent in addition $100 a month as an allowance.

They removed to Chicago and lived from last January to June at 1308 Michigan avenue, when Dutilh told her they were in reality not married, but their bond was a fake wedding. He left her and married Miss Brinck. Miss Miller told the police the elder Dutilh stopped the allowance to his son.

SEVEN HURT IN AUTO CRASH.

Street Car Hits Motor and It Is Thrown Against a Lamp Post.

Seven persons were seriously injured early this morning when a street car crashed into an automobile at Thirty-first street and Dearborn. The car belonged to William Butler of Harvey, Ill., but he was not in the machine.

The machine was tossed against a lamp post and turned over.

Edson Rehm of 679 North La Salle street, the driver; J. J. Leman of 839 North La Salle, Daniel Loftus of 4311 Elston avenue, Earl Hicks of 809 North La Salle, and Fred Diadowski of 2243 Menard avenue were among the injured.

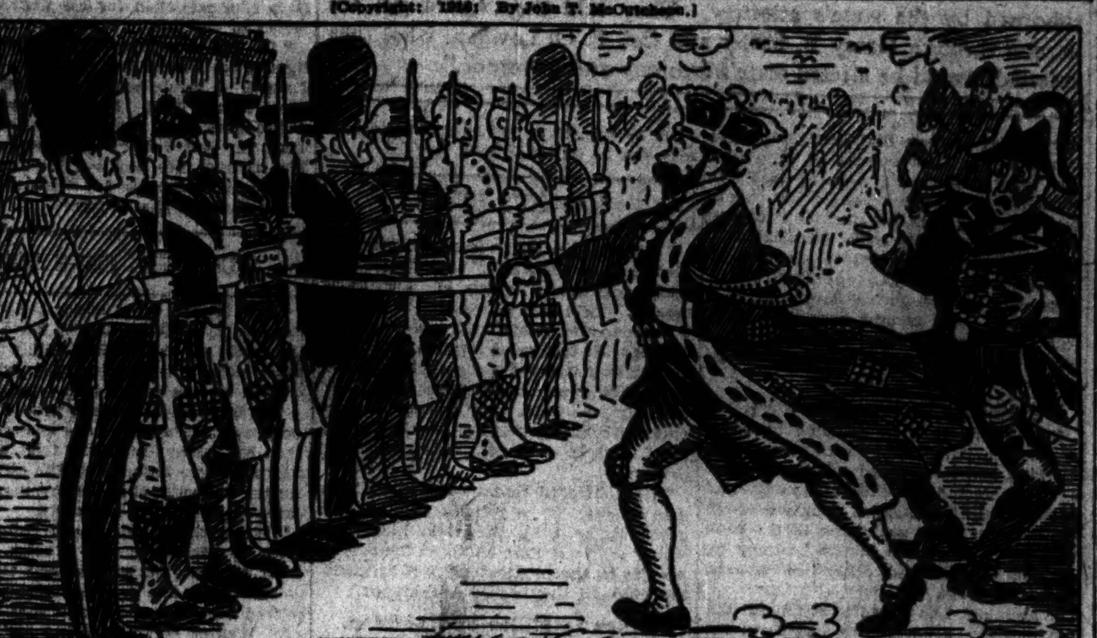
TRAIN KILLS BRIDAL PARTY.

Knox, Ind., Sept. 23.—While on their way home a few hours after they had been married, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Castleman and Russell Stephenson, 14, son of Mrs. Castleman by a previous marriage, were killed when a railroad engine hit their buggy at a grade crossing in the business section of Knox tonight.

THE GOLDEN FLEECE

AN AFTER-THE-WAR ROMANCE.

[Copyright: 1916: By John T. McCutcheon.]



SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS—The King is distressed by the vacuum in the treasury and sends for the Lord High Chancellor of the Exchequer. The latter proposes a plan for the swift recovery of most of the vast wealth that has been spent for supplies in America. The King approves the plan and sends for the Lord High Commander of All the Land and Naval Forces of the Empire. When the Lord High Commander appears the King discloses the plan. The commander is thunderstruck, as well he might be. The King orders the Lord High Commander to assemble all the armed forces of the empire in front of the palace, and when they are all there he goes out on the balcony and begins to address them.

CHAPTER III.

The King began to speak.

Before him stretched the endless rows of soldiers, each battle-seasoned face upturned toward the figure of the King. A tense silence overhung the great assemblage. Even the restless stamping of high strung horses suddenly ceased as though the animals themselves had sensed the solemn import of the moment.

"My brave men," said the King, "you have undergone incalculable hardships. Your bravery and devotion will live as an epic in the annals of human courage and your deeds will be the inspiration of countless generations yet unborn. You have earned from a grateful nation an honored rest, but——"

"There are other sacrifices yet in store for you!"

A low murmur of wonderment rose from the vast expanse of closely packed men. What did the King mean?

"Our records," said he, "are rich to overflowing with deeds of valor, but our treasury is depleted to the dregs. We are thirty billions to the bad. The Americans have gotten all, or nearly all, the liquid wealth of the world. The golden flood that has been drawn from our veins has gone to enrich our neighbor overseas, and this vast flood of gold has lodged in the pockets of a very small number of favored ones. The rest have got the crumbs."

The King paused. His eyes flashed with determination. His voice became harsh and strident.

"We must recover that money!" he shouted. "It must come home again!"

A thunderous chorus of approval greeted these words.

The King descended from the balcony and walked along between the files of fighting men. He scanned each man and ever and anon he signalled one to step forth from the ranks and take his place apart.

When a certain number had been thus told off he stood before them.

"You are the pick of the service," he said. "Are you ready to die for your country?"

"We are," they answered in a single voice.

The King then drew his sword and marched toward them.

A shudder of horror swept over the assembled legions.

W. K. BILLINGS IS GUILTY.

Murder in First Degree Verdict of San Francisco Jury—Life Imprisonment Recommended.

San Francisco, Cal., Sept. 23.—Warren K. Billings was found guilty late this afternoon of murder in the first degree in connection with the bomb explosion at the preparedness day parade, July 22, when ten people were killed and half a hundred wounded.

The verdict was returned in the court of Superior Judge Dunne.

Thomas Mooney and his wife, Rena Mooney; Israel Weinberg, and Edward Nolan, charged with murder in connection with the same crime, are yet to be tried. Clemency was recommended.

The first of a series of letters by James O'Donnell Bennett, detailing conditions behind the German lines on the Somme, will be found on page 3 of part 2 of this issue. Mr. Bennett gives a graphic picture of the "business of war" as carried on by the Kaiser's troops, and shows how peaceful pursuits back of the trenches are keeping up the fighting endurance of the German troops out in front.

Battle for Life in the Air Thrills at Country Fair

The gay crowds attending the last day of the South Shore Country club's charity fair yesterday witnessed an absorbing fight for life in lake and air, with the balance of victory against the grinning one by the thickness of a hair. The plunge from the air to the lake, the desperate attempt at rescue that failed when a motor boat engine went dead, and finally the swift dash of the police boat, that darted in and snatched the aeronaut from the lake, were events that crowded a lively five minutes.

C. A. Coey, amateur aeronaut, made a balloon ascension from the pier, as part of the entertainment program. He had been aloft but a few minutes when the thousands at the grounds saw he was in difficulty. The big gas bag began to deflate rapidly, and deep pockets formed, in which the wind caught, beating the sky sailor out over the lake.

When the balloon began to drop, Henry Bosch, in his motor boat, started full speed for where it appeared it would fall. Half way to the spot his engine went dead. Hundreds of men, women, and children, including many society folk patrons and managers of the fair, lined the shore. Some one had called up the Jackson park police in the meantime, and in a few minutes the police motor boat came roaring to the scene, driving straight for the balloon, which was awash, with its pilot clinging to the basket, entangled in such a manner that he could not release himself and swim clear.

The work of rescue was made difficult, owing to the danger of entangling the boat with the balloon, but Coey was finally lifted into the boat. He was taken to the gymnasium in the old building, where he was revived.

Prior to Coey's disastrous ascension Mrs. Lawrence Heyworth took a trip in the balloon, returning without mishap. She asserted the air journey was delightful and said she wasn't the least bit nervous. She was among the witnesses when, a short time later, Coey and the balloon plunged into the lake.

PRAIRIE CLUB MEMBER HURT AT WARRENVILLE

Miss Margaret Shields, Forrestville School Teacher, Knocked Unconscious by Piece of Iron.

Miss Margaret Shields, a teacher of the Forrestville school, was severely injured yesterday afternoon when she was struck by a piece of iron hurled from a passing freight car on the Aurora, Elgin and Chicago Electric at Warrenville.

Together with seventy-five men and women, members of the Prairie club, Miss Shields had just completed a seven mile walk from Winfield to Warrenville and was waiting for a train to return to Chicago. The piece of iron struck her on the head and rendered her unconscious.

Dr. Abram Parks, 1300 Carmen avenue, attended her.

HOYNE SIZZLER CHARGES PLOT TO INDICT HIM

'Liar,' 'Graft,' Shots Fired Back by Erbstein and O'Donnell.

RESULT OF EVERS ROW.

The international blackmail syndicate exposed by a raid of government secret service men left the more or less quiet paths of polite robbery and plunged unexpectedly into the turmoil of Cook county politics yesterday.

State's Attorney Hoyne in a sensational statement charged that Charles E. Erbstein, Patrick H. O'Donnell, and Charles Macauley, Mr. Erbstein's law partner, were plotting an ante-election conspiracy to encompass his defeat.

He said Attorney Erbstein's effort to have him arrested for detaining and questioning Helen Evers, of the syndicate, was part of the political plot.

FALSE AFFIDAVIT PLOT.

Information had reached him, he declared, that this triumvirate planned to present false affidavits obtained from convicts in the Joliet penitentiary, before a hostile special grand jury impaneled by a hostile judge, and directed by a hostile special prosecutor.

Mr. Hoyne charged that the convicts who had been approached in this conspiracy are Nathan Steinberg, Jacob Stevelson, and Max Lubin. A false affidavit, he said, had been obtained from Stevelson, which set out that the convictions in the Storen graft cases had been obtained by perjury suborned by the state's attorney.

When he refused to make a false affidavit, Mr. Hoyne declared Steinberg was hung up by the thumbs in prison and set to work on the rock pile through the influence of Erbstein and O'Donnell.

SEEK WARRANT FOR HOYNE.

Mr. Hoyne's statement was the sequel to an attempt by Mr. Erbstein to obtain before Municipal Judge Joseph S. La Buy warrants against the state's attorney, Edward J. Fleming, his secretary; Assistant State's Attorney Dwight McKay, and Detective Sergts. William Bowler and George Trafton, charging them with a plot to extort a confession by false arrest of Mrs. Evers.

Judge La Buy refused to issue the warrants. Mr. Erbstein appealed to Chief Justice Harry Olson of the Municipal court, who ordered Judge La Buy to hear evidence on the complaint Monday. Judge Olson said he might sit en banc with Judge La Buy on that occasion.

SHORT AND UGLY BY ERBSTEIN.

Mr. Erbstein used the shorter and uglier word and qualified it by the adjective "unmitigated" when referinrg to Mr. Hoyne. He said he never had talked to Steinberg except to cross examine him at the Storen trial, had never heard of Stevelson, and did not know Lubin. He said he had not been to Joliet for a year.

He declared he would apply to every judge in Chicago if necessary to obtain a warrant against the state's attorney. If he fails in his quest, he said, he would mandamus the chief justice of the Criminal court or carry the case to the Illinois Supreme court.

In a veiled threat regarding the action he proposed to take Mr. Erbstein said he would do "something worse" than sue Mr. Hoyne for criminal libel. He did not make it clear what course this would be, but he said he had Mr. Hoyne where he wanted him and the prosecutor was now "due for a nice little jaunt through the courts."

O'DONNELL HAS "CONFESSIONS."

Mr. O'Donnell admitted frankly that he had a statement—though not an affidavit—from Stevelson, in which the convict said the evidence in the Storen case was framed in Joliet penitentiary. He said that two "eminent Chicago lawyers" had heard Steinberg admit that he had lied on the stand in his testimony against Capt. Storen and Serg. Weisbaum.

Mr. O'Donnell said he had in his possession seven confessions to prove that the testimony upon which Storen and his co-defendants were convicted was perjury suborned by the state's attorney and his assistants.

Mr. O'Donnell's vitriolic reply to the state's attorney's assertions reached their climax when he said:

"I have traced the graft of the mil-

PASSING THE BOUQUETS

From Erbstein to Hoyne to Erbstein to O'Donnell and Around Again.

STATE'S ATTORNEY HOYNE charges a plot among Charles E. Erbstein, Patrick H. O'Donnell, and Charles Macauley to obtain false affidavits against him from convicts in Joliet penitentiary. These affidavits, he declares, were to be presented to a special grand jury impaneled by a hostile judge and directed by an inimical special prosecutor.

PATRICK H. O'DONNELL said: "I have traced the graft in the million dollar burglar trust into Mr. Hoyne's office and have fastened it on one of his employes."

CHARLES E. ERBSTEIN said: "Mr. Hoyne is an unmitigated liar. I will have a warrant for his arrest if I have to mandamus the chief justice of the Criminal court or carry my demand to the Illinois Supreme court."

CHARLES W. HADLEY, state's attorney of Du Page county, said: "Steinberg, the convict, told me Erbstein, O'Donnell, and an 'ex-judge from Chicago' had promised him a pardon if he would make an affidavit that the testimony in the Storen case was perjury suborned by the state's attorney. They said they would get the pardon through Harry B. Miller and Col. F. O. Lowden, who, they asserted, would be elected state's attorney and governor."

lion dollar burglar trust into Mr. Hoyne's office and have fastened it upon one of his employés."

Exactly what he meant by this Mr. O'Donnell refused to explain.

HADLEY ADDS TO GAYETY.

Charles W. Hadley, state's attorney of Du Page county, cleared up the identity of the judge before whom the alleged conspirators were to apply for the impanelling of a grand jury to indict Mr. Hoyne. Mr. Hadley said it was Judge William Fennimore Cooper. It was Judge Cooper who appointed John E. Northup to investigate vote frauds after Hoyne's election.

Mr. Hadley said that in Joliet prison last Monday Steinberg told him he had been visited by O'Donnell, Erbstein, and "an ex-judge from Chicago." These three, Steinberg said, had offered to get him out of prison if he would make an affidavit that his testimony in the Storen case was perjury.

According to Steinberg's story, they said they would have great influence with Harry B. Miller, who would be the next state's attorney, and Mr. O'Donnell was an intimate friend of Frank O. Lowden, who would be the next governor. They promised, Steinberg said, to obtain his release from prison through Mr. Miller or Mr. Lowden.

HOYNE'S CHARGES

Mr. Hoyne's statement follows

"The application before Justice La Buy for warrants against me and some of my assistants is a forerunner of the filthy kind of a campaign that is to be waged over the election for state's attorney.

"The crooked police, burglars, thieves, pickpockets, shyster lawyers, parasites, fixers, and other criminals who belong to the criminal organizations in Cook county are rallying to the support of my Republican opponent.

"Sept. 19, 1916, E. J. Dodd, came out in an open letter of indorsement for my opponent, in which he styled himself the president of the Chicago Patrolmen's association. Dodd is no longer a member of the police force, and the only reason he is not in the penitentiary now is that the statute of limitations ran against him before this office received evidence of his crime.

RECALLS STINE "SLUSH FUND."

"Dodd was one of the patrolmen's committee who, with William Stine, collected $42,000 from patrolmen. Patrolmen who failed to contribute were threatened with discharge from the police force. Stine was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary.

"This 'slush fund' was collected for the purpose of attempting to bribe the city council to raise the patrolmen's pay. It was largely through the efforts of Deputy Chief Herman F. Schuettler that the evidence was collected and Stine convicted. Stine, in his defense, testified that he had turned over to Dodd between $6,000 and $7,000 out of the total sum collected, which Stine directed Dodd to return to the patrolmen from whom it was collected.

CHARGES EMBEZZLEMENT.

"It was not returned, so that Dodd in addition to having joined the conspiracy to shake down the police department, was also guilty of embezzling the sum of money turned back by Stine.

"There is no such organization, of course, as the Chicago Patrolmens' association, and it never had any office unless it was Dodd's hat. In past years Dodd has used this alleged organization and his connection with it solely for the purpose of collecting money from candidates for office.

Turns to Legal Trio.

"During the last thirty days Charles E. Erbstein, his partner, Macauley, and Patrick O'Donnell have visited the penitentiary at Joliet for the purpose of inducing convicts to make false affidavits charging me and various of my assistants with subornation of perjury.

"O'Donnell and Erbstein are now awaiting trial under five indictments. Macauley was formerly disbarred by the Supreme court of this state and recently reinstated.

"These distinguished members of the bar visited Nathan Steinberg, who was convicted in Cook county of burglary, anr who after being paroled was returned to Joliet for breaking his parole by consorting with burglars and thieves and participating in other burglaries.

"Steinberg was asked to swear that the testimony he gave against Police Capt. Storen and Police Sergt. Michael Weisbaum, who is now serving a term in Joliet, was false, and that he was induced to make the false statements by me or some of my assistants.

Steinberg Refuses, He Says.

"Steinberg says he declined to make a written statement until after the election and he learned whether or not I was reëlected. Steinberg says that as a result of his refusal a deputy warden caused him to be sent back to the rock pile, and also caused him to be hung up by the thumbs and otherwise abused and mistreated.

Weisbaum has a soft berth in the penitentiary, according to Steinberg, due to the influence of O'Donnell and Erbstein, exercised through the deputy warden. He is assigned to the telephone switchboard.

Get One Affidavit.

"In carrying on this outrageous scheme they visited Jacob Stevelson, convicted by this office for receiving stolen property, and obtained from him a false affidavit to the effect that he (Stevelson), Abe Frank, another convict, Steinberg and Wexler manufactured in Joliet false testimony which was used to convict Capt. Storen and Weisbaum.

"Stevelson knows nothing about the Storen case, but was induced to make this affidavit upon the promise of O'Donnell and Weisbaum that after the defeat of Hoyne they would secure his release.

"Efforts also were made to procure similar affidavits from Max Lubin, now doing time in Joliet for horse stealing, but this effort failed.

Cites an Authority.

"State's Attorney Charles W. Hadley of Du Page county is cognizant of these transactions in Joliet and has related to me the progress of these negotiations from time to time.

"I am also informed that Steinberg was told by O'Donnell or Erbstein that after the latter had obtained these affidavits they proposed shortly before election day to apply to one of hte judges of the Superior court, with whom I have had past differences, for the empaneling of a special grand jury and the appointment of a special state's attorney to inquire into the false charges to be launched against me.

No Blame for Zimmer.

"In conclusion, I would say that I am not suggesting any blame should be attached to Warden Michael Zimmer, whom I know to be an honest and courageous official, and I have no information that any of the indicted members of the bar above mentioned had any authority to use the name of any judge.

"I make the foregoing statement in order that the judges of our various courts and the public may be apprised of the criminal methods which these desperate creatures propose to employ in their efforts to defeat me, and so that the courts may not be imposed upon."

HADLEY'S STORY

"I received a letter from the prisoner Steinberg ten days ago," said Charles W Hadley, state's attorney of Du Page county. "He said he wanted to see me. I went to the prison and saw him last Monday. He told me O'Donnell, Erbstein, and an ex-judge of Chicago, whose name he did not give, had been to see him. They told him, he said, they wanted him to make an affidavit that he never had given Capt. Storen or Sergt. Weisbaum any money.

"He confessed that he had given both men money. If he refused to make the affidavit, he said, they told him they would see to it that he spent the rest of his life in the penitentiary. If he made the affidavit they would get him out.

Brings in Miller and Lowden.

"They told him, he said, that Miller was going to be the next state's attorney of Cook county and they were strong with him and could see that he got out. They told him, he said, that Mr. O'Donnell was on terms of intimate friendship with Mr. Lowden, and that Mr. Lowden was going to be the next governor and that Mr O'Donnell would get the new governor to release Steinberg on parole.

"Steinberg said they wanted him to make affidavit that the testimony he had given in Capt. Storen's trial had been concocted in the state's attorney's office by Mr. Hoyne and Assistant State's Attorneys Case and Berger.

Judge Cooper's Name Brought In.

"They said if he made the affidavit they would go before Judge Cooper and have Mr. Hoyne arrested. Then, they said, they would have him impeached and removed from office.

"According to Steinberg, the conspirators proposed to take action against Mr. Hoyne at once. Steinberg asked me what to do, and I told him not to make an affidavit or testify to anything that was not the absolute truth. He said they had influence with the penitentiary officials and could make it hard for him if he did not do as they wanted him.

"Steinberg asked me to communicate this information to Mr. Hoyne, and I did so last Wednesday. I had no interview with Lubin or Stevelson."

LIAR, ERBSTEIN SAYS

"State's Attorney Hoyne is an unmitigated liar," said Mr Erbstein in discussing Mr. Hoyne's statement. "I have not been to Joliet penitentiary for a year. I can prove this by the prison records of visitors. My last visit was about this time last year in behalf of Michael Stagnola, convicted of murder.

"I never said two words to Steinberg in my life except when I cross examined him for two days on the witness stand in the Storen case. I never heard Stevenson's name until now. I never heard of Lubin. I do not know the name of the deputy warden of the penitentiary whom I am accused of influencing.

Charges It to Politics.

"Mr. Hoyne is trying to make political capital. I am not a politician. I did not spend a cent in my campaign. I did not make a speech. I was at home with my wife and baby every night. Yet I received six times as many votes as Thomas Marshall, who was State's Attorney Wayman's first assistant and who never was indicted.

"My trial is set for Monday after next. Mr. Hoyne hopes by this latest move to prejudice all prospective jurors against me.

Fight for Warrant to Go On.

"I am going to every judge in Chicago in my effort to get a warrant against Hoyne for false arrest in Mrs. Evers' case. If all of them turn me down I will mandamus the chief justice of the Criminal court. I will go to the Supreme court of the state if necessary. I am going to leave nothing undone to have him punished for his flagrant violation of the law.

"In his typewritten statement maligning me I have just the goods on him I want. I won't bother with suing him for criminal libel. I will do something worse than that. I won't say now what that is. But I have got the goods on him at last. He has put his foot in it hopelessly and he is due for a nice little taunt through the courts."

O'DONNELL FIRES BACK

"Mr. Hoyne talks about graft," said Patrick H. O'Donnell. "I have traced the graft of the million dollar burglar trust into his own office and have fastened it on one of his own employés.

"Every man connected with the Storen prosecution except one has confessed that his testimony at the trial was perjury and was induced by the state's attorney's promise of immunity, money and extravagant living in hotels.

"When the parole board refused paroles to Steinberg and Wexler, Hoyne went to Gov. Dunne and had them paroled. After his parole Steinberg committed nine law violations that I know of. Wexler committed two and is now living in a resort of ill repute in Blue Island avenue, though he has not been discharged.

Points to Other Paroled Men.

"Ike Kaminskey has committed four violations in Chicago and is still at large. Abe Frank, who is supposed to testify against me, obtained $7,200 by his operations in Canada and the United States between the date of his parole, May, 1915, and the date of his arrest, February, 1916.

"Two eminent lawyers of Chicago took Steinberg's statement in which he declared his testimony in the Storen trial was perjury suborned by the state's attorney. One of these lawyers accompanied me to Joliet and the other went alone.

Tells of Berger Visit to Joliet.

"Assistant State's Attorney Henry A. Berger saw Steinberg in Joliet two weeks ago. He called Steinberg from his work in the quarries. After Steinberg went back he told his fellows that Berger had promised to get him pardoned if he testified against me and Mr. Erbstein. Steinberg and Lubin organized a court among convicts in the stone quarries and have been coaching witnesses what to testify against me. Two Irishmen told me that today.

"I have not, as Mr. Hoyne says, an affidavit from Stevelson. But I have a statement from him taken down by a stenographer. It is now in the hands of my attorney, J. J. Healy.

Fixes Date Nine Years Away.

"I have had nothing to do with Lubin. Steinberg has sent for me several times, but he is too big a crook for me to have anything to do with. The last time he sent for me I sent him word to come to see me in my office when his nine years are up and I might talk to him then.

"I have seven confessions in my possession to prove that the conspiracy against Storen was concocted in Joliet penitentiary as Abe Frank said it was. I will not give the names of these seven men at present. Some of them are prisoners. Some of them are big men in Joliet."

ABSURD, SAYS ZIMMER

Warden Michael Zimmer of Joliet penitentiary said:

"It is absurd. Steinberg's alleged statement that he was triced up by the thumbs is false. That sort of punishment has been obsolete in Illinois prisons for several years.

"My first deputy warden is Peter Kline. I am sure he has not been influenced into inflicting punishment on any one or into making it easy for any one. He believes in doing his duty.

"Steinberg, Ben Frank, Stevelson, and Lubin were told today that they would be called on a habeas corpus writ to appear before the Cook county grand jury Monday. I suppose they will testify regarding the charges now put out by Mr. Hoyne.

"Patrick H. O'Donnell was here today. I was told he held an interview with Steinberg, but I am not sure whether he did or not."

Cause of the Row.

Mrs. Evers was arrested late Friday night in Joseph Berdell's cabaret at 2217 Cottage Grove avenue by Detective Sergts. Bowler and Trafton. She was with Willard Powers, known as the "Waco Kid." She was taken to State's Attorney Hoyne's office, where from midnight until 5 o'clock in the morning she was questioned by Assistant State's Attorney McKay. She says all Mr. McKay asked her was where and when she had met Edward Fleming. Mr. McKay says all he asked her was concerning any possible knowledge she might have of the "pay off joint" operations of the Waco Kid.

Mrs. Evers' arrest followed the swearing out of a subpoena summoning Mr. Fleming as an alibi witness to testify in the woman's behalf at her hearing on Oct. 1 before Commissioner Mark A. Foote. She is charged with being one of the blackmail band that held Mrs. Regina Klipper prisoner for six weeks in Montreal.

Moran Opposes Move.

When Mr. Erbstein applied before Judge La Buy in the South Clark street court for warrants against Mr. Hoyne and his assistants the request was opposed by Assistant State's Attorney Moran.

"Before I issue warrants for public officers I want to investigate the truth of the charges," said Judge La Buy.

Stephen A. Malato, former assistant state's attorney, appeared to represent Mr. Hoyne.

The judge then announced that he would not issue the warrants.

"All right," said the attorney. "I'll write out some more and take them to Chief Justice Olson; no, I won't tell where I'll go, but I'll get them from some judge who is not afraid to issue the warrants."

Olson Orders La Buy to Hear Plea.

When Mr. Erbstein carried his application for warrants before Judge Olson the chief justice said: "Judge La Buy should have heard evidence. The Municipal court is afraid of no one when a matter of law is involved."

Judge Olson called Judge La Buy on the telephone.

"How would you like to be picked up yourself in the middle of the night," he asked over the wire, "and rushed to the state's attorney's office, on no charge whatever? The status of the individual makes no difference. The state's attorney is not above hte law. The law would apply to him if he were the emperor of China or the president of the United States. I am going to send Mr. Erbstein back to your court. You must hear evidence on his complaint and issue the warrants if the facts justify it."

REPEL GERMANS IN GAS ATTACKS

Petrograd Says Large Force of Teutons Were Beaten Off at Lake Naroez.

BERLIN CLAIM SIMILAR.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 23.—German troops in the region of Lake Narocz, on the northern end of the Russian line, launched a gas attack lasting two hours yesterday, and in the intervals between the gas waves dense columns of Teuton troops advanced against the Russian positions, says the Russian official statement issued today. The attacking forces were driven back each time. The statement follows:

Yesterday morning in the region southwest of Lake Narocz the enemy launched a gas attack lasting two hours. In the intervals between the waves of gas the enemy attempted to attack in dense columns, but was driven back on each occasion to his trenches by our machine gun, rifle, and artillery fire. In the region of Darevo and La Busy, southeast of Baranovichi, the enemy also liberated gas.

German Official Statement.

BERLIN, Sept. 23.—Strong Russian attacks yesterday against the German positions near Korynitza, in Volhynia, were without success, says the German official statement issued today. Fighting activity in the Carpathians is said to be slackening. The statement follows:

Prince Leopold of Bavaria—Near Korynitza strong Russian attacks failed.

Archduke Charles of Austria—There is no change in the situation north of the Carpathians. In the Carpathians the fighting is slackening. Isolated enemy attacks were unsuccessful.

BERLIN PAPERS WANT NO PEACE IF U. S. HAS PART

German Prince's Suggestion of Mediation Is Ridiculed—Wilson Assailed.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 23.—The Berlin Tages Zeitung today ridicules Prince Alexander of Hohenlohe's recent article in the Neue Zuricher Zeitung, in which he reported the conclusion that Pope Benedict and President Wilson must bring about peace if general European bankruptcy is to be avoided, and also expresses the belief that a cessation of American supplies of munitions to the allies would be followed mechanically by the cessation of the war.

The Tages Zeitung makes the article a basis for a new attack on President Wilson and Ambassador Gerard.

Sees Menace in U. S. Attitude.

The Tages Zeitung points out what it declares have been the repeated declarations of the president, Secretary of State Lansing, and the ambassador, that "the duty of the United States is to interfere as a mediator and participate in the peace negotiations, not as a mediator but actively, just as one of the belligerents."

The newspaper declares that this attitude menaces Germany, and continues: "Peace under American auspices could never be a German peace, but would contain in itself German dependence on the United States and therewith on our enemies."

Calls America Calculating.

Maj. Moraht in the Berliner Tageblatt speaks on the fighting on the Somme as raging to and fro, and continues:

"Something in this may perhaps change the course of things during the autumn or winter, but at present we must reckon with a continuation of the struggle. The enemy is still standing. If America, the coolly calculating promoter of all the resistance, does not desist from this bloody business, then only a victory of the central powers can bring the enemy to a recognition that the endless continuation of the struggle in Europe only serves to benefit these laughing heirs to Europe."

GERMANY TO MAKE PROTEST AGAINST THE USE OF 'TANKS'

International Red Cross Will Be Asked to Forbid Use of "Unfair Engines of War."

LONDON, Sept. 23.—An Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Geneva says that it is understood there that the German government proposes to lodge a complaint with the International Red Cross against the use of the so-called "tanks." The complaint will b. on the ground that the use of these new engines of war is contrary to recognised methods of civilized warfare.

CRE

WILL THE ALLIES BREAK THROUGH GERMAN LINES?

Depends on Ability to Gain Old Ground Faster than Teutons Intrench Anew.

While in Russia Charles Johnston met and married Mlle. Jelihovshaya, elder sister of the wife of Gen. Alexei Brusiloff, the most brilliant of the commanding generals of the allied offensive. Mr. Johnston has written several illuminating articles on phases of the war for leading magazines.

BY CHARLES JOHNSTON.

[Copyright: 1916: By Charles Johnston.] [The Chicago Tribune's Distinguished Writers' Service.]

What is the real aim of the " big push " —the Anglo-French offensive on the Somme? Probably twofold. First, as expressed with grim simplicity by Lord Derby, " To kill Germans "; second, and this is of vital importance, to develop the method of final victory.

Since modern trench warfare came into being there have been two great offensives on the western front—the Champagne drive, beginning Sept. 25, 1915, and the Verdun drive, beginning Feb. 18, 1916, and still continuing. Each brought vital facts to light and disclosed formidable problems.

For final victory the entente powers must assimilate these facts and solve these problems. This can only be done progressively and by actual experiment. On the Somme we are in the presence of a part of the experiment.

Importance of Artillery.

The first fact disclosed in Champagne and at Verdun is the enormous importance of artillery in two ways: First, to smash trenches; second, to stop infantry.

The first is done by mortars, firing into the air a heavy shell, which drops on the trenches and explodes. The allies on the Somme wish to find out what mortars and how many give the maximum result. They will then create an immense supply of these mortars in their arsenals, which are still being hugely expanded.

The second use of guns is to stop infantry counter attacks, after the enemy trench has been smashed up and occupied. This is done by shrapnel, which explodes, not among the attackers [this would drive them forward], but ahead of them, so that, as a Russian officer in Galicia said the other day, the attackers " have to push their heads into the guillotine."

It is comparatively easy to get the three inch guns firing shrapnel rapidly forward; they can go as quick as the attacking infantry. It is far from easy to get the huge mortars forward, over ground smashed up into lunar craters by their own enormous shells.

An Engineer's Problem.

That is an engineer's problem, and while the allies are solving it by means of armored motorcars—which with the allies' superiority in the air have proved of enormous advantage—they have not completely solved it yet. But even now there is a diminishing interval between the waves of their advance.

Again, the allies must learn how to economize infantry. Verdun taught that. They are attacking in new formations which avoid the battle slaughter suffered by German troops before Verdun. But the best results have not yet been reached. And too many officers are killed.

Finally the allies have yet to reach their full force, both in men and guns. England has 2,000,000 more to come, with something more than proportionate artillery. France will add fewer men, but perhaps more surprises in guns. So that the big push is only in its childhood. It will learn and it will grow.

International Team Work.

Just why the allies chose the twenty-odd miles of front before Peronne and Bapaume for the big push from several hundred miles of battle line has not been told. Success there will cut valuable railroad arteries, but this is true at many places on the front. Perhaps the chalk of Artois, as contrasted with the mud dikes of the Pripet and the glacial rock of the Trentino, tempted them, because it is easy to " dig in." But that works both ways. Probably this point was chosen, as being the joining point of French and English, to develop international teamwork.

Looking forward from the allied line on July 1, when the big push began, one saw a rolling chalk country, yellowish-white, with white waves and cross waves, where the trenches cut the chalk; dry ravines, in part wooded, cut it up into small plateaus, each with its village, set amid trees and gardens. The trees are now wintry stumps. The valuable thing in the ruined villages is the cellarage, for the house walls afford no more protection than paper.

A word about the maps: The higher points are marked with numbers, which represent their height in meters above sea level, a meter being about forty inches. Thus the famous Hill 304, near Verdun, is 304 meters (997 feet) above sea level; but as the level of the Meuse at Verdun is 205 meters (672 feet), the famous Hill 304 is really only 325 feet above the Meuse. The same in the Somme battlefield. The string-straight road from Albert to Bapaume crosses, just north of Pozieres, a long ridge at a height of 160 meters (524 feet) above sea level, but as the Somme at Peronne is 48 meters (157 feet) above sea level, the ridge beyond Pozieres is only 367 feet above the Somme. It requires a little arithmetic, but it is worth while.

We have as yet no real figures for Lord Derby's grim objective; we do not know how many Germans have been killed nor at what cost. But the Germans are bringing up fewer reserves and more slowly..

Next Stage Seems Eeasier.

The main feature in the yellowish white landscape before the British line when the big push began was the chalk ridge beyond Pozieres, crossing the Albert-Bapaume road at right angles, rising to some 360 or 400 feet above the Somme, and forming the horizon about three miles ahead of the English lines. The space between was cobwebbed with German trenches cut in the chalk and cocooned with barbed wire entanglements.

The British are now in possession of the crest of the ridge for five or six miles. The cobweb of trenches, ironed flat by the sixteen inch mortars, lies behind them, though new trenches (necessarily much less elaborate) are being dug in the chalk ahead. They have fought their way uphill for three miles. They are now looking down a slope to Bapaume.

The Problem That Remains.

On their part the French have already passed Peronne, their immediate objective, on the south, occupying the Santerre plateau in the loop of the Somme southwest of Peronne; they have fought their way past Peronne to the north. When they complete that the city, with its railroads, will fall. The railroads are already paralyzed by long gun fire. The French gains have been vital; their losses not heavy.

This problem remains: The allies in a single advance gain as much ground, perhaps, as New York's Central park, wiping out the German defenses over that area. Can the German intrench an equal area farther back in the same time? If so, the allies have not yet solved the problem of breaking the German line, though they can push it back and back. If, on the contrary, the allies can gain old ground more rapidly than their adversaries can intrench new ground, then they can break through; and recently they have been speeding up.

DOBRUDJA TIDE TURNS IN FAVOR OF ROUMANIANS

Resume Offensive and Hammer Flanks of Mackensen Army, Now Reported Fleeing.

[BY CABLE TO THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.]

LONDON, Sept. 23.—The tide has turned in favor of the allies in the great battle in Dobrudja. Once more the Roumanian and Russian troops are on the offensive and are driving Field Marshal von Mackensen's army of Germans and Bulgars toward the Bulgarian border.

By smashing at the flanks of the enemy —one along the Danube and the other resting on the Black sea coast—the allied troops are forcing his whole line back. Under a decided disadvantage on account of the increasing length of his line as he retreats, the German commander is vainly trying to strike back.

Bad Defeat for Von mackensen.

Unofficial reports lead observers here to believe that the retreat of the Bulgars along the southern bank of the Danube has been turned almost into a rout. Silistria already has been abandoned to the Roumanians, according to a telegram received in Rome from Switzerland and forwarded here tonight.

If this report is true the victory of the Roumanians is far greater than official communications indicate. The northernmost port of the Danube touched by the invaders was Marleanu, northeast of Oltina lake. From there to Silistria it is thirty miles, the extent of the Bulgars' retreat, if there is basis for the Rome report.

Army authorities here are inclined to discredit this rumor, however, as well as the statement by Berlin that all of the Roumanian attacks have ended in failure.

Teuton Efforts Failure.

The main thing is that the blows of Von Mackensen evidently have failed to crumple in the line guarding Constanza and the sole railroad approach into Roumania from the Dobrudja.

Today's news tends to disprove the assertions of the Berlin and Sofia war offices that in Thursday's desperate fighting the Roumanian flanks were turned and the army routed. If Von Mackensen had cut through the Roumanian lines on both wings he would have been able to roll the center of the army back between two fires and almost annihilate it. The recovery and attack of the allied forces yesterday shows that no such sweeping blow was inflicted upon them.

Hard to Figure Rout.

The Bulgarian official announcement of yesterday, made public today, states that the Russo-Roumanian army assailed Von Mackensen's line Thursday with 200,000 men. It is pointed out that the German general hardly possesses forces strong enough to put to rout a well equipped and comparatively fresh army of 200,000 men.

Apparently the Roumanians were thrown back for some distance only on one section of their line, where, spurred on by the success of the day before, they had advanced dangerously ahead of the main force.

On the Macedonian front rains have interfered with operations to some extent, temporarily putting a stop to the Serbian offensive against Monastir.

Between Prespa lake and Florina the Bulgars have recaptured some trenches which the allied troops have made no effort to win back yet.

German Report on Dobrudja.

BERLIN, Sept. 23.—The war office tonight gave out the following report on operations in Dobrudja:

A battle occurred on the line of Casioci Enginees (Enigea?) and Karakoi. The enemy attacked with about twenty battalions, three batteries, and nine squadrons, being routed by a counter attack and pursued by our cavalry until dark.

Of activities in the Transylvania sector the report says:

On both sides of Hermannstadt about two Roumanian divisions attacked and were repulsed with serious and sanguinary losses by our advanced detachments.

In the course of counter attacks we made three officers and 526 men prisoners.

Near Szt Janoshigy our advanced posts were withdrawn during the night.

We have taken Vulcan pass, which is safe from enemy attempts at recapture.

Report on Macedonia.

Describing activities in Macedonia, the report says:

On the heights of the Staranereoka Planina, between Prespa lake and Florina, north of Bigla heights, enemy infantry was dispersed by our artillery fire. We captured some trenches.

In the Moglenica region a hostile battalion was dispersed by our fire.

East of the Vardar, after artillery preparation, an attack was made by enemy infantry, which we repulsed.

On the slopes of the Belasica Planina we took the villages of Calmish and Svetipuka. The territory south of the Belasica Planina to Krusa-Balkan has been evacuated by the enemy.

ONE YEAR AGO TODAY IN THE EUROPEAN WAR

German finance minister announced subscription for war loan of $3,000,000,000.

Bulgaria called out all men up to 50 years and fortified Black sea ports.

Encircling Russian attack rolled back Von Mackensen's army north of Pinsk.

At Wilojka German forces were defeated by Russians and several cannon teams captured.

DUTCH MAIL STEAMER TAKEN BY GERMANS, THEN RELEASED

Vessel Taken to Belgian Port and Enemy Subjects Removed—Americans and Mails Not Molested.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—The Dutch mail steamer Prinz Hendrik, which left Flushing this morning for London, having on board a number of Russians, French, Belgians, and British, including some escaped war prisoners, was captured twenty miles out from Flushing by the Germans and taken to Zeebrugge. Ninety-eight passengers were aboard. Sixty-four of them were detained.

Several Americans were aboard the steamer, including Herbert C. Hoover, chairman of the American commission for Belgian relief, but these were not molested.

The steamer was later released and returned to Flushing. It will proceed for London tomorrow. Heavy mails were aboard, among them much from America. According to the latest advices the American mail was not touched.

One report says a submarine made the capture; another says that the German craft was a destroyer.

1,200 PACKAGES OF U. S. MAIL RELEASED BY THE BRITISH.

[BY CABLE TO THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.]

LONDON, Sept. 23.—Consul General Skinner succeeded today in effecting the release from the prize court of 1,200 packages of letter mail from the United States to belligerent countries seized on the steamship Helig Olav on its arrival in British waters on March 28.

The British and French reply to the American censorship protest was dispatched today on the American liner Philadelphia.

ITALIANS REPEL VICIOUS ATTACK IN CARSO SECTOR

Austrians Enter Trenches, but Are Driven Out, Rome Says —Envoy Page in Danger.

ROME, Sept. 23.—On the Carso plateau, over which the Italians are attempting to advance in the direction of Triest, a heavy attack was made last night by the Austrians. They penetrated Italian trenches, the war office announced today, but subsequently were driven out. The statement says:

Along the whole front there was intermittent artillery action, which was particularly intense in the Astico valley. On the Carso plateau last night the enemy made an attack in force on Hill No. 208, south of Novavas, the principal point in the line we occupied recently. Small detachments succeeded in breaking into some of our trenches, from which they were driven out promptly.

Repel Austrian Attacks.

At dawn the enemy renewed his efforts against the same positions, launching at the same time an attack on Hill No. 144, northeast of Monfalcone. Everywhere he was repulsed. The violence of the attacks, which cost the enemy dearly, demonstrate the importance attached by him to possession of these two hills which, however, are strongly held by our troops.

Hostile aeroplanes dropped bombs on Monte Vecchio, Monte Maggiore, Vicenza, and the district of Misurina on the upper Ansiei, without causing any damage.

Envoy Page Endangered.

On his trip to the Italian front the American ambassador, Thomas N. Page, had two narrow escapes from Austrian shell fire. The ambassador returned to Rome today, accompanied by Capt. Elvin R. Heiberg, military attaché at the American embassy, and Lieut. Commander Charles R. Train, the naval attaché, having been absent two weeks. It was while they were motoring in the Dolomites region that they were endangered by the fire of the Austrian artillery.

The party visited the lower Isonzo and witnessed the Austrian bombardment of Goritza. The Americans also watched Italian aviators maneuvering among the mountain peaks under fire of anti-aircraft guns. Members of the party expressed admiration of the Italian military organization and of the effectiveness of the new Italian short range guns, designed to destroy barbed wire entanglements.

Austrian War Report.

VIENNA, Sept. 23.—The war office tonight describing activities on the Italian front says:

In the Carso highlands enemy attempts to approach our lines were repulsed.

Our troops early today exploded a mine and blew up the summit of Monte Cimone, which the Italians occupied on July 24. Thirteen officers and 378 men were made prisoner in the action.

BRITISH KEEP UP SLOW ADVANCES

London Statement Tells of Gain on Half Mile Front.

FRENCH TAKE A REST.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—The British troops on the Somme front in France are continuing their progress. The official statement issued by the war office tonight said:

A further advance was made last night by our troops east of Courcelette. A strongly fortified system of enemy trenches was captured and our line was advanced on a front of about a half mile. West of Mouquet farm the enemy counter attacked at nightfall yesterday with great violence, but was driven back by our fire with heavy losses.

Today we continued to improve our positions, pushing detachments forward at places into the enemy's advanced trenches.

During a bombardment by our artillery of one section of the enemy's front yesterday ten hostile gun pits were destroyed, fourteen others severely damaged, and five ammunition pits blown up. A big fire was caused by our artillery in a village used by the enemy's transport for supply purposes.

Repulse Vosges Attack.

PARIS, Sept. 23.—No infantry action occurred today on the section of the Somme front held by the French. There were violent artillery duels in the Bouchavesnes and Belloy-Berny regions. The statement says:

The enemy in the Vosges attempted to attack our positions south of Sainte Marie pass. After a lively combing fight the enemy was driven back to his trenches.

North of the Somme French patrols making their way to the southern boundaries of the village of Combles found numerous German dead on the field. These detachments captured fifteen German prisoners, including one officer.

Berlin Official Report.

BERLIN, Sept. 23.—North of the river Somme the battle between Anglo-French forces and troops commanded by Crown Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria was resumed yesterday, says today's German official statement. The statement follows:

After a continually increasing artillery fire the French attacked our Combles-Rancourt line. They achieved no success whatever. Neither did the British, which attempted to advance near Courcelette.

A supplementary report states that during the night of Thursday English local attacks near Mouquet farm and Courcelette were repulsed.

Wilson Says Fight of Capital and Labor Is Greatest Peril to This Country.

kets of the world were waiting for their service, and as they have sought and obtained entrance into the markets a new vision has come to them, of what the development of the resources of America means; of what the organization of American efficiency means; of why it was that American merchants and American manufacturers and American miners and all the multitude of men who have developed the peaceful industries of America, were planted under this free polity in order that they might look out upon the service of mankind and perform it.

Opening of New Era.

"There never was a time when the pulse of energy and success beat so strongly in the veins of American business as it beats today. And yet I hope that all business men in America realize that we are only at the beginning of a new era.

"America has not played its proportionate part in the development of the trade of the world. I mean that it has not played a part proportionate to the gifts of Americans and the resources of America, and that in the times to come, partly because of the unhappy circumstances of recent years, but chiefly because America is now about to release her energies, the scope of American business will be what men have hitherto not dreamed of, if American men know how to take advantage of the opportunity.

"The problems that are before American business are world problems rather than American domestic problems. America must understand the world in order to subject it to its peaceful service. And yet when we look upon the field of American business there are some things that disturb us. Some men seem to think that the way to advance American business is to walk backward and to attempt again the provincial policies which have characterized an age when we shut our doors against influences of the world.

Co-operation Is Needed.

"But the chief cloud that is upon the domestic horizon is the unsatisfactory relations of capital and labor. There is only one way, gentlemen, in which the relations of capital and labor can be made satisfactory. That is by, in the first place, regarding labor as a human relationship of men with men; and, in the second place, to regard labor as part of the general partnership of energy which is going to make for the success of business and business enterprise in this country.

"So long as labor and capital stand antagonistic, the interests of both are injured and the prosperity of America is held back from the triumphs which are legitimately its own

"You know that we have been a legalistic people. I say with all due respect to some men for whom I have a high esteem that we have been too much under the guidance of the lawyers, and that the lawyer has always regarded the relations between the employer and the employé as merely a contractual relationship, whereas it is, while based upon contract, very much more than contractual relationship.

Labor Not a Commodity.

"It is a relationship between one set of men and another set of men with hearts under their jackets and with interests that they ought to serve in common with persons whom they love and must support on the one side and on the other.

"Labor is not a commodity. It is a form of coöperation, and if I can make a man believe in me—know that I am just, know that I want to share the profits of success with him—I can get ten times as much out of him as if he thought I were his antagonist. And his labor is cheap at any price. That is the human side of it, and the human side extends to this conception—that that laboring man is a partner of his employer.

"If he is a mere tool of his employer he is only as serviceable as a tool. His enthusiasm does not go into it. He does not plan how the work shall be better done. He does not look upon the aspect of the business or enterprise as a whole and wish to coöperate the advantage of his brains and his invention to the success of it as a whole. Human relationships, my fellow citizens, are governed by the heart, and if the heart is not in it nothing is in it.

Disbelief on Both Sides.

"I have recently been through an experience which distressed me. I tried to accommodate a difference between some of the employés of the American railways and the executives of the American railways, and the distressing thing I discovered was that on the one hand there was unlimited suspicion and distrust of the other side and that that suspicion and distrust was returned by the other side in full measure.

"The executive did not believe in the sincerity of the men and the men did not believe in the sincerity and fairness of the executives, and while arbitration was being discussed I had this sad thought: Arbitration is a word associated with the dealings of hostile interests. It is an alternative of war. There ought to be no such thing as the contemplation of hostility as between men whose interests are the same and who should coöperate together.

"And, therefore, it came upon me with a force that it had never had before that the real problem of capital and labor was to bring the two sides to understand and believe in one another; that the problem of the next generation, if America were really to release her energy, was to be this real, genuine, fundamental reconciliation between capital and labor.

Factions Were Far Apart.

"I did not realize until I held those conferences just how far apart they were in that particular and indispensable part of our national life, the transportation of the country, and when I did realize it I saw that there was a great task that was worth any man's while ahead of us to bring the minds of the country together, to see that the men understood one another, to see that they had some assurance that they were speaking the truth to one another. I never had franker conferences in my life than I had with the representatives of the two sides.

"You know that when the public began to notice this controversy it had already been going on for some time. I had been watching it with great anxiety, and when it became evident that an accommodation was not going to be reached I thought it my duty to try my hand at the difficult task of accommodation, because I knew how much was involved, not only in the immediate effects of a great strike such as was threatened, but also in the ultimate effects, the soreness left, the resentment that would remain, the feeling of hostility that would be accentuated, and so I asked the privilege of consulting with them.

Controversy a Simple One.

"Before I consulted with them I, of course, made myself acquainted with the points at controversy and I learned that they were very simple indeed; that the men demanded an eight hour day, and that in order to make the eight hour day work they demanded that the railroads pay them one-half more for overtime than they paid them for the time in the regular day, the men alleging that that was the only way they could obtain a genuine eight hour day, by making the railroads pay more for the time beyond the eight hours than they paid for the time within the eight hours. I saw at once that there was one part of this that was arbitrable, but that in my opinion there was another part that was not arbitrable. I do not regard the question of the principle of the eight hour day as arbitrable.

"The first thing I told both sides before I requested their opinion was that I stood for the eight hour day. I received no suggestion of any kind from either side as to what the basis of settlement was to be, except that the railroad executives did suggest that congress give them some sort of assurance that if the eight hour day went into operation, they would get increased rates for the carriage of their freight. I pointed out to them that it was impossible to tell whether they would need increased rates for the carriage of their freights.

Makes for Better Work.

"We believe in the eight hour day because a man does better work within eight hours than he does within a more extended day, and the whole theory of it, a theory which is sustained now by abundant experience, is that his efficiency is increased, his spirit in his work is improved, and the whole moral and physical vigor of the man is added to.

"This is no longer conjectural. Where it has been tried it has been demonstrated. The judgment of society, the vote of every legislature in America that has voted upon it is a verdict in favor of the eight hour day.

"And, therefore, I said to those gentlemen on both sides at the very beginning: 'The eight hour day ought to be conceded.' But they said: 'It will cost us an immense sum of money.' 'How do you know how much it will cost you?' I replied.

Court Ruling Is Cited.

"You remember there was a case decided by the Supreme court of the United States. It was known as the 80 cent gas case, where, by legislation in the state of New York, 80 cents was established as the charge for the unit of the supply of gas, and the law was contested upon the ground that it was confiscatory, and, therefore, unconstitutional.

"And when the appeal reached the Supreme court of the United States it said: 'Nobody can tell until you try to manufacture gas at 80 cents whether it is confiscatory or not. Go ahead and manufacture gas and sell it for 80 cents, and then if it proves impossible to conduct your business upon that charge come back and discuss with us the confiscatory character of this act.' And it may be remarked in passing that the company never went back to discuss it.

"I said to the railroad executives: 'You are asking that the result of the eight hour day be predicted and the prediction be arbitrated. You are asking for an arbitration of a conjecture, of an opinion, of a forecast of the figures of experts based upon an entirely different experience, and if you were to ask me personally to arbitrate such a question I would say I am not competent to arbitrate it. The reasonable thing to do is to grant the eight hour day, not because the men demand it but because it is right, and let me get authority from congress to appoint a commission of as impartial a nature as I can choose to observe the results and report upon the results, in order that justice may in the event be done the railroads in respect to the cost of the experiment.'

Asked Congress to Act.

"That was the proposal which they rejected and which congress put into law, a proposal which I made to them before I conferred with it, which I urged upon them at every conference, and which, when the one side rejected and the other side accepted, I went to congress and asked congress to enact. I did not ask either side whether it suited them, and I requested my friends in congress not to ask either side whether it suited them. I learned before the controversy began, so far as I was concerned in it, that the whole temper of the legislative body of the United States was in favor of the eight hour day.

"When I carried it to congress some very interesting things happened. In the house of representatives the plan was passed, was sanctioned, by a vote which included, I am told, about seventy Republicans, as against fifty-four Republicans; and in the senate I am informed that the Republican members of the senate held a conference in which they determined to put no obstacle in the way of the passage of the bill. Now this was because the proposal was reasonable and was based upon right.

Society's Interests First.

"But that is not the end of the story. This thing ought to have been done, and it had to be done at the time that it was done, so as to bring about a reasonable trial of the eight hour day and a careful examination of the results of the eight hour day. But that does not finish the matter. Let me call your attention to what I believe we ought all to be thinking about so as to set the stage for this and all similar cases.

"There are some things in which society is so profoundly interested that its interests take precedence of the interests of any group of men whatever. One of these things is the supply of the absolute necessaries of life. It would be intolerable if at any time any group of men by any process should be suffered to cut society off from the necessary supplies which sustain life.

"But these supplies are of no use unless they can be distributed, and in the matter of the distribution of goods, particularly of the goods that sustain life and industry, the interest of society is paramount to every other interest; and the difficulty about all situations like that which we have just passed through is this, that the main partner is left out of the reckoning. These men were dealing with one another as if the only thing to settle was between themselves, whereas, the real thing to settle was what rights had the 100,000,000 people of the United States.

Government Must Be Firm.

"The business of government is to see that no other organization is as strong as itself, to see that no body or group of men, no matter what their private interest is, may come into competition with the authority of society, and the problem which congress, because of the lateness of the session, has for a few months postponed, is this problem: By what means are we going to oblige persons who come to a controversy like this to admit the public into the partnership by which the thing is discussed and decided?

"That is not an easy problem. A great many different methods have been proposed and one of the reasons why congress thought it necessary to postpone the decision for a few months was that there were so many honest differences of opinion, not as to the object, but as to the method.

"I want to suggest to you a means of testing your fellow men as to whether they know what they are talking about or not. It is not necessary for a man to come and argue with me an obvious moral principle, but I am very much interested when he comes and argues with me how he is going to make it work. And when men say: 'We must not permit any organization to neglect the interests of society,' I say, 'Amen, but what I want to sit down and discuss with you is: How are we going to prevent it?'

Real Problem at Issue.

"The only thing worth talking about in politics or any other sphere is the constructive idea: 'How are you going to do it?' We all know, or at any rate we pretend to know, what we ought to do, but we do not all know how to do it, and the very difficult question which the American people is now face to face with, and which they are going to settle, is this: 'How are we going to organize our participation as a partner in the settlement of disputes between capital and labor which interrupt the life of the nation?' I invite all subscribers to suggest a method.

"The question is apt to be obscured in some quarters, as if we were saying that it was the right of the government or of organized society, which is another term for the same thing, to say to a man: 'You must work whether you want to or not.' America is never going to say to any individual, 'You must work whether you want to or not,' but it is privileged to say to on organization of persons, 'You must not interrupt the national life without consulting us.'

Must Act After Talking.

"It is not a question of obliging individuals; it is a question of enforcing a partnership and seeing to it that no organization is stronger than that organization which we all belong to and support and call and love by the name of our own government.

"So I laid a program before congress by which, at any rate, a beginning might be made in that direction, and that program is going to be proceeded with.

"It is no fun talking unless you can expect to do something. The only zest that ever comes into affairs for a man with red blood in his veins is the zest that comes when he is put to it to think out a difficult thing and do it; and I for my part congratulate the business men of America that some of their difficulties have been removed by legislation; that they have been fortified against certain forms of control which must have been intolerable to them; that they have had their real commercial strength put at their service by such acts as the federal reserve act, for example, and that now, if they think they can conquer the world, it is up to them to do it; and that nobody is going to assist them, because it is a thing in which they cannot be assisted by anything but their own brain. We are now out in the open, competitors for the confidence of the world, and there is only one way to get it, and that is to earn it.

Servants of No Man.

"I cannot imagine anything more inspiring than to be put on your mettle after legislation has taken the shackles off you and appraised you. You know that you are no man's servant. Reaction in this matter would shut us up like a province. To turn back upon any portion of the road we have traveled would be craven.

"To pretend that we are able to compete with the world and then cringe at the opportunity would not be worthy of any of the traditions of America and so for my part I am particularly proud to be supported by the business opinion of American men, because I know myself to have a great enthusiasm for the triumphant development of American enterprise throughout the world."

HOWLING CROWDS WELCOME HUGHES AT INDIANAPOLIS

Acclaimed Again and Again as He Attacks Acts of Wilson Administration.

BY E. C. HILL.

Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—The welcome that Charles Evans Hughes got here tonight when he drove through streets so solidly massed with cheering men and women that the police had to clear a way for his car inch by inch, and later when, standing at the side of Charles Warren Fairbanks, his running mate, he addressed 6,000 persons in Tomlinson hall, beat anything of the kind Hoosier memory could recall.

Every presidential aspirant within recent times came to Indianapolis to make his bow—Cleveland, Ben Harrison, who lived here; McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, Bryan, Parker, and Wilson—but not one of these, it is agreed, ever drew together such masses of people, or evoked as much enthusiasm, or was heard with such earnest, unflagging attention.

Record Rally in State.

It was the record rally in a state which dares the other forty-seven to match it for political pep. It was just the sort of climax for the Indiana three days' tour that the Republican leaders had been hoping for, but had scarcely dared expect.

The result of Indianapolis' tremendous greeting to Mr. Hughes convinced the Republican and Progressive brethren that Mr. Hughes is already president so far as Indiana is concerned, and that there remain only a few formalities to make the thing legal—counting the votes and laying his right hand on the Bible when the chief justice meets him on the front porch of the capitol.

Hosts Rush to Indianapolis.

It is essential to tell of the rally here before mentioning the reception that Indiana gave to Mr. Hughes earlier in the day in the manufacturing cities of northern Indiana and especially in the great steel mill city of Gary.

As the train ran into dusk and Marion county it passed interurban cars and teams be-bannered and loaded down with whooping Republicans who were aiming toward the capital city and the Hughes rally, passed hundreds of automobiles bustling in from the prosperous Indiana farms, roared by all sorts of buggies and surreys and farm wagons, and right then and there one saw that the whole center of the state was piling into the big town.

Met by Howling Mob.

As the Hughes special slip into the Union station rockets shot upward, fifteen or twenty bands all tried to break out at the same time in "The Star Spangled Banner," and then there exploded a roar that quivered the air.

It arose from 20,000 persons jammed in the immediate vicinity of the station. They got the first signal, but presently the shouting grew and spread and rolled up the different streets.

And then in all the clamor and bursting of lights and the waving of flags the train came to a stop, and down the platform walked Charles Warren Fairbanks, candidate for vice president, his hand outstretched and his primest smile doing full time.

He welcomed Mr. Hughes, and Mr. Hughes responded. Mrs. Hughes and Mr. Fairbanks' daughter, Mrs. John W. Timmons, were chatting by that time and all sorts of important persons were milling around and yelling to the policemen and having a thoroughly pleasurable evening.

Hughes Leads the Parade.

Pretty soon the parade was organized with Mr. Hughes and Mr. Fairbanks and Mrs. Hughes and Mrs. Timmons in the lead-off limousine. There was a solid line of cars that would have made Detroit sit up and take notice, every car dressed up in the gayest of bunting. The crowd had been roped off, but the eagerness to get a look at Mr. Hughes was too impetuous to be restrained by hemp. The crowd bulged itself all over the place and yelled.

The candidates were taken to the Marion club first, so they could witness the old fashioned party parade Indiana leaders had organized in their honor.

When it came along Mr. Hughes and Mr. Fairbanks saw that it had everything that an old time Hoosier parade ought to have. There were 18,000 men in line, more than half of them members of labor organizations. Every trade and profession was handsomely represented.

Rushed to Tomlinson Hall.

Of course there was time only for Mr. Hughes and Mr. Fairbanks to review the head of the column, because they had to hustle to Tomlinson hall to appear before four big outside meetings and to make a speech before the inside crowd.

It was impossible for Mr. Hughes to address the four outdoor meetings near Tomlinson hall, even though at least 12,000 persons waited for him. His voice was in a condition too precarious to risk in the night air. But he showed himself upon the platform while it was explained why he could not speak. Then he entered Tomlinson hall and faced 6,000 more.

Speaker Deals Telling Blows.

Mr. Hughes gave Indianapolis the best in his repertoire, hitting his strongest at the Wilson tariff, the Wilson surrender of arbitration, the Wilson extravagance of government, and the Wilson betrayal of American rights in Mexico and on the seas.

If it is possible to say which of these topics was best received the venture may be made that it was the part of the speech which deals with the Adamson bill and the dangers of civil war if a policy of surrendering the principle of arbitration in industrial disputes should be continued.

His tariff talk, recalling idle mills and idle workingmen of two years ago, dealing with the temporary prosperity brought about by the European war, and predicting that a rush of European goods to this country after the war will mean business depression and idle labor once more until prosperity is saved by a protective tariff, was enthusiastically received.

His audience rose to his Mexican utterance and applauded his downright declaration for Americanism and preserving the rights of American citizens against any nation until the walls of venerable Tomlinson hall quivered.

Adamson Bill His Target.

On the Adamson bill he said:

"There was a time in the past when men who had differences fought them out. It was success of the strong. As civilization developed we got courts and tribunals where men might go for settlement of the disputes.

"We have not proceeded as far in respect to social complaints and grievances as we have with individual differences relating to ordinary private rights of property. There is a good deal yet to be done in providing proper means for determining the great controversies affecting the social order.

"But no true friend of labor can fail to understand that one of the greatest victories ever won by labor was the attainment of the just principle of arbitration for labor disputes, and labor must never give up that victory.

Act Bears Wrong Label.

"We had a bill passed by congress the other day which wears a label it is not entitled to. It is not an eight hour law at all, but a pay law.

"It does not focus the desires of labor. It does not prohibit any railroad company from employing men for any length of time. There was no demand for an eight hour law, but there was a demand on the part of a certain class of labor for more pay.

"It was a matter which could have had prompt and fair investigation. Insted, the executive forced passage of the bill. That is the path to disaster. It was a shameful surrender. I stand like a rock against the exertion of such force.

"When anybody tells me a great emergency requires legislation in advance of investigation, I ask them this: How much are you going to yield? Where will you draw the line? Where will you make a stand? Do you think you will accumulate courage by repeated surrenders? I am a friend of labor, one whose records proves friendship, but I say I would not surrender anything to either labor or capital in advance of knowledge of the facts." (Great applause.)

Concise Views on Tariff.

His atriff utterance he put more concisely than ever before:

"Our friends must think this election is going to be decided by men who do not know anything, do noth read anything, who have no memories, to suppose that they would be deluded by a prosperity of a temporary character created by the conditions of the European war. That war will end one of these days and then if you want to know what will happen go back and see what did happen when there was no war time demand from Europe."

Mr. Hughes summarized the industrial and labor depression early in 1914, giving figures of closed mills and of unemployment in the cities and then continued

"Now when these war orders stop the effect will be tremendous in this country and if we do not have a tariff adjusted to meet our needs we shall be in a serious condition."

Mr. Hughes rebuked Democratic wastefulness and gave figures to prove it. He promised efficiency in government with the best men to be found in government service.

Body and Mind Wearied.

Throughout the speech there were volleys of applause and at its conclusion Mr. Hughes received a great reception.

When he retired for the night at the home of Mr. Fairbanks he was barely able to speak above a whisper and was thoroughly body and mind wearied.

Tonight and tomorrow he will have a good rest here and his physician thinks he will be able to resume campaigning labors Monday in Ohio in fair voice once more.

Earlier in the day Mr. Hughes delivered six speeches at La Porte, Michigan City, Gary, Valparaiso, Plymouth, and Rochester although at all of these places except Michigan City and Gary he was able to say merely a few words and show himself to the thousands.

At Michigan City he addressed 10,000 car builders in overalls and received close attention and fine applause. At Gary, in East Side park, 8,000 heard him talk for twenty minutes on the tariff and the Adamson bill principally.

Rookette's Chantey Portrays Higgins As a Zero, Socially

Barney Higgins

HEREAFTER the socially impossible Mr. Barney Higginc of the United States navy will beware of condescending rookettes bearing gifts. If the plans stewed up by indignant navy men to maroon the chief quartermaster in the Bering sea have not shaken that sturdy soul with fear, here is a poem that should teach him to waggle a civil tongue and put his horny hands in custody of the manicure's union.

The author is Miss Emily Larned, who wore the khaki at the Geneva woman's training camp. Here is her muse:

APROPOS OF MR. HIGGINS OF THE U. S. NAVY.

By a Rookette.

Poor Hig is up for trial
Because he spoke his mind;
Examining the weighty facts.
This is the case we find:
The Rookies had a "ladies' ball,"
And he was left behind.

Now on the presentation day
Right loudly did he bawl,
"I will not take this souvenir
At all, at all, at all."

Our "Higgins" of the Navy,
This is what I mean to say:
"You cannot be a snob
And serve the U. S. A."

In a letter accompanying the verse Miss Larned explains that Higgins proved an able drillmaster, but "as a social light he was hardly to be considered."

THREE NEUTRAL NATIONS AGREE UPON CO-OPERATION.

Norway, Sweden, and Denmark Will Help Each Other in Their Foreign Affairs.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—The Christiania conference of representatives of the Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish governments has resulted in a further development of the plan for coöperation during the war in matters affecting the foreign affairs of the three nations. Through the Danish foreign office last night there was issued a statement setting forth what was accomplished at the conference. This statement says:

"The three countries are unanimous for maintenance of loyal and impartial neutrality during the present war.

"Special attention was devoted to the destruction of neutral ships and cargoes, as well as to the consequences entailed by the issue of blacklists by the belligerents. It was agreed, with a view to facilitating the commercial policy of the three countries, that they keep each other mutually informed as to measures to be taken in the respective countries in regard to both commercial policy and the repression of commercial espionage, to safeguard their interests in the sphere of commercial policy after the war.

"It was agreed, in view of present circumstances, that the three countries, by themselves or in common with other neutrals, cannot take the initiative in mediation between the belligerents or take measures in any way analogous to such mediation. Furthermore, it was agreed that it would be desirable to establish closer collaboration among the greatest possible number of neutral states for the purpose of safeguarding their common interests, while observing the strictest impartiality."

MOTHER OF NINE KILLED.

James Wade, 60 years old, 5949 South Halsted street, is being sought by the Morgan Park police in connection with the death of Mrs. Ella Kulken, 35 years old, 953 West Ninety-fifth street. She died Friday night from the effects of a criminal operation, Coroner's Physician Springer determined. She leaves nine children.

ONE CHANCE LEFT TO BAR GENERAL GOTHAM STRIKE

State Board of Mediation Meets Tuesday, Day Before Walkout Is Called For.

New York, Sept. 23.—With both sides prepared to force a "show down," New York's street car strike enters its fourth week tomorrow with a general walkout of 800,000 union workers apparently assured, according to labor leaders, unless some means of settlement is found before Wednesday.

The one hope that a "general suspension of work" may be averted rests in the fact that the walkout is set for one day after the state board of mediation and conciliation is scheduled to open an inquiry into the car strike.

Samuel Gompers, head of the American Federation of Labor, declared in Washington today that if the general strike in sympathy with the carmen becomes effective, it may last all winter if necessary to a union victory.

Theodore P. Shonts, president of the Interborough company, operating the subway and elevated lines, responded to the Gompers statement with a declaration that organized labor is 'tyrannical.'"

Unions Vote on Strike.

Unions throughout New York and vicinity voted today on the proposition of a general walkout adopted by their leaders. Those involved include milk handlers, waiters, telephone workers, plumbers, garment workers, journeymen horseshoers, painters, bartenders cigarmakers, stationary engineers, decorators, carpenters, cooks, barbers, meat cutters, pressmen, coopers, dock carpenters, tailors, musicians, teamsters, longshoremen, and men in other industries.

The first court action in an effort to prevent the strike spreading was taken late today, when members of a wholesale garment-making firm obtained an injunction from Justice Guy restraining the Garment Cutters' association from calling out members of the union in interference of contracts, members of the union have with the plaintiff concern.

If this application to the courts is successful, it is believed other employers may take similar action.

Some Hold Contracts Bar.

One faction of trades unionism is said to hold the belief that the proposed "suspension of work" would constitute a repudiation and abregation of satisfactory contracts which were signed in many cases after long and difficult negotiations. Those favoring a sympathetic strike have taken the position, on the contrary, that there would be no violation of contract obligations, provided the workers expressed htetr willingness to continue work if their employers were able to supply them wiht satisfactory means of transportation.

Under existing contracts, a strike would be impossible in the building trades of the city, in the Allied Printing Trades, and several others, it was said.

If 600,000 of the union workers appealed to respond it is estimated that the wage loss resulting from their quitting work would amount to $1,650,000 a day.

GREECE GIVES ALLIES TERMS FOR ITS ENTRY INTO THE WAR

If Not Accepted King Constantine May Declare War on Bulgaria on Own Account.

ATHENS, Sept. 21, via London, Sept. 23.—[Delayed.]—The Greek government is said, on the best authority, to have telegraphed definite proposals to the entente capitals which, if accepted, will mean Greece's entry into the war.

If the uncertainty of the relations between Greece and the entente continues, it is regarded as not improbable that Greece may declare war on Bulgaria on its own account.

Semi-official efforts of the cabinet to ascertain from the entente ministers here a statement as to the desires of the allied governments have been fruitless.

The ministers were given to understand that as many as three members of the Greek cabinet were ready to resign if the entente wished. The sole reply was that instructions had not been received.

CLEAN SWEEP FOR CONGRESS HOPES G. O. P. IN STATE

Expects at Least 24 of 25 Candidates to Win—McCormick and Mason by 150,000.

BY E. O. PHILLIPS.

Springfield, Ill., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—Illinois Republicans expect to make practically a clean sweep of the twenty-five Illinois congressional districts in November. They are positive that the two nominees for congressmen at large, Medill McCormick and William E. Mason, will be elected with the rest of the state ticket with a lead over the Democrats of from 150,000 to 200,000.

Never were the prospects better, it is claimed by Republican experts, for a clean-up of the downstate congressional districts, not excepting even the landslide of 1904, when every Republican nominee for congress in the state was elected. The chances in Chicago are asserted to be just as satisfactory.

Clean Sweep Downstate.

It is conceded that Congressmen Copley, Fuller, McKenzie, Sterling, McKinley, Cannon, Rodenburg, Williams, and Dennison will be elected without difficulty. Many of them have no opposition. Congressman Wheeler in the Springfield district, which is normally Democratic, has a hard opponent in Thomas Rees of Springfield, and the district is classed as fighting ground.

In the Monmouth district William J. Graham, the Republican nominee, seems certain to defeat Clyde Tavenner, Democrat. Clifford Ireland, who defeated Joseph V. Graff for the Republican nomination in the Peoria district, is picked as winner over Congressman Stone. Harry Ferrinan has better than an even chance to defeat Martin D. Foster in the old time Democratic district that centers around Vandalia.

The only Democratic congressman that looks like he had a sure thing is Rainey of Carrollton, and nobody has had the nerve to run against him.

G. O. P. Strong in Chicago.

The Chicago districts are in excellent condition from a Republican viewpoint, the Republican managers say. Congressmen Madden, Mann, Wilson, Britten, and Foss are considered impregnable in their districts. The Republicans have a chance in the stockyards district, where Congressman McDermott was defeated for renomination. Congressman Sabath is likely to be reëlected due to the desire of the Democrats to elect their county ticket.

The Sixth district contest will be a sizzler between Congressman James McAndrews, the Democratic incumbent, and Arthur W. Fulton. Niels Juul is picked to defeat Congressman Frank Buchanan on the northwest side.

The situation in the Eighth district, now represented by Congressman Thomas Gallagher, is hazy. N. L. Piotrowski, who was a defeated primary contender against Gallagher, may run independently, it is reported.

There might be such a thing as keeping the woman suffrage plank out of the Democratic state platform next Tuesday if the final makeup of the house of representatives looks good to the wets.

COLORADO MOOSE TO HUGHES

Chairman Willcox Told Leaders Ar Working Vigorously for Republican Candidate.

New York, Sept. 23.—[Special.]—Colorado Progressives, who cast 32,000 votes in 1914, are practically all for Charles E. Hughes, the Republican presidential candidate, according to a telegram received by Chairman Willcox from Dr. Hulbert Work, Republican national committeeman from Colorado. The telegram reads:

"Virtually all the Progressive leaders in Colorado have come out for Hughes and Fairbanks.

"Benjamin Griffith, who was the Progressive national committeeman for the state, and A. A. Lee of Denver, the Progressive county chairman, are working vigorously for national Republican success."

BRUNDAGE GAINS IN COOK COUNTY; PLURALITY 1,173

Barr Carries Downstate on Official Count by 59 Votes—18 Chicago Wards Finished.

Except for the fact that Edward Brundage is constantly gaining votes in the canvass of Cook county votes his defeat in the race for Republican nomination for attorney general would be certain.

This became evident yesterday when official returns from all counties outside of Cook were given out at Springfield. Taking the police returns for Cook county and the official returns for downstate, Senator Richard J. Barr wins by fifty-nine votes. But Brundage watchers claim that he has already made a net gain of 1,809 votes over the Cook county police returns. Only eighteen wards, however, have been canvassed.

The Latest Figures.

The latest returns are:

Brundage, downstate, official	80,779
Brundage, Cook county vote, with 18 of the 35 wards in Chicago official and the other wards unofficial	20,987

Congress at Large Vote.

The secretary of state also completed the totals for the Republican nomination for congressman at large, with all 101 counties included. On the basis of these official figures and using police returns for Cook county, Medill McCormick leads former Senator William E. Mason by 53,967 votes, and has a plurality over Congressman at Large B. M. Chiperfield of 75,881. Mason defeats Chiperfield for the second nomination by 21,914.

Summary of the returns follows:

	McCormick.	Mason.	Chiperfield.
Downstate, official	88,958	54,887	70,320
Cook county, unofficial	78,060	57,164	20,817
Totals	167,018	112,051	91,137

The state canvassing board will meet when the returns from Cook county get here from Chicago. County Clerk Sweitzer advised Secretary Stevenson that they would reach the capital some time on Monday.

There is much talk about a contest because of the closeness of the Barr-Brundage finish. Experts are searching the law books and the records for some sort of procedure whereby a contest can be started. As far as known there is no method under the direct primary law of instituting a contest for a state office.

Chief Clerk Dennis J. Egan announced that by tonight the official figures for Cook county on the state ticket will be completed.

Mrs. W. C. H. Keough, statistician for the sanitary district, has been appointed a delegate to the state Democratic convention at Springfield on Tuesday. She will be the only woman delegate from Cook county, and in case the convention decides to adopt a plank for full suffrage she will introduce it.

Fairbanks' Itinerary Planned.

For the Republicans, Charles W. Fairbanks will begin a long speaking tour in the west on Tuesday at Omaha. Before returning to Indiana he will speak in Colorado, Utah, California, Oregon, Washington, Montana, North Dakota, and Minnesota.

Senator Smoot of Utah was in Chicago during the day en route for the west. He said he believed the Republicans will wrest control of the senate from the Democrats. Another caller at western headquarters was J. N. Dolley, for six years chairman of the Kansas state committee. Mr. Dolley came out with the statement that the women of Kansas are strong for Hughes.

Lowden Train Itinerary.

Chairman Fred E. Sterling of the Republican state committee today announced the second day's itinerary of the special train which is to leave Chicago Tuesday, Oct. 3, carrying Frank O. Lowden and Medill McCormick, William E. Mason, and other Republican candidates for state offices on a campaign speaking trip through Illinois. The schedule for the second day of the trip, Wednesday, Oct. 4, is as follows:

FAMILY FORGETS PAST TO ASSIST JOE BURNSTEIN

Morrison Case Figure Cut Off Since Marriage Fifteen Years Ago.

Joseph Burnstein, whom Judge Landis held in $5,000 bonds, was a much surprised man when three relatives, headed by Hermann P. Burnstein of 1122 South Central Park avenue, a brother, appeared to sign his bond. The prisoner testified on Friday he let his two daughters be adopted by Edward Morrison, the millionless millionaire, because their mother on her death bed confessed that Morrison was in truth their father.

Brother Explains.

Last night Hermann Burnstein explained the stand taken by Joseph's family.

"I have not spoken to Joe for the last fifteen years," he shouted angrily, "and, what is more, I will never have anything more to do with him than I can possibly help. The rest of our family feels the same way.

"But, even if we have thrown Joe out of the family, we cannot stand by and see that crowd give him unjust treatment. That is why we interfered. But I am not through yet.

Ready for Judge Landis.

"I am going up to that court next week, and I will tell Judge Landis a few things all right. We knew that Morrison was fooling around with Joe's wife right along. Why, the gay old bird as much as admitted it to me after he had gone out to her funeral.

"You just put this in your paper, and tell Judge Landis he has not yet heard from Joe's family. He's going to wake up and do some listening pretty soon."

Clyne and Hoyne to Compare Notes.

United States District Attorney Clyne and State's Attorney Hoyne will compare notes in the case against James E. Ward, former attorney for old man Morrison. Ward is awaiting grand jury investigation of alleged perjury.

"I am going to ask Mr. Hoyne for a conference on this case," said Mr. Clyne last night. "I understand he has some facts which will be helpful. It is probable that we can talk things over on Monday.

ANSWERS WIFE FROM PRISON

Cornelius Clark, confidence man, replied to his wife's suit for divorce from his cell in Chester penitentiary yesterday. Mrs. Clark pleads for a divorce because her husband was convicted of operating a confidence game and sentenced to prison in December, 1915, in Sangamon county. Clark admits this, but says his wife had full knowledge of his operations and profited thereby, and, furthermore, kept him informed of the movements of detectives when he was in hiding.

ROLLING TO ALTAR

Or, Getting Married at a Fast Clip.

Miss Edna Schildein

The climax to a romance which developed equably despite a most unsteady foundation will come Wednesday when Miss Edna Schildein of 3144 North California avenue will marry Raymond S. Wilson at the Riverview roller rink. Both were members of the Riverview Skating club three months ago. Then they met at the rink and skated together, once, twice—many times.

Bride, groom, and 1,500 fellow members of the club will be on rollers during the wedding ceremony. Immediately after the final words the whole party will perform a grand march on skates. However, it has not yet been announced that the Rev. J. P. Brushingham, who will officiate, will add a pair of skids to his customary vestments.

"CAP" GOSSIPS WITH HELEN.

Morrison Allows Mrs. Evers of Blackmail Notoriety Is "Slick Lookin' Gal."

"Cap" Morrison, whose millions are in controversy in the federal court, thinks Mrs. Helen Evers, held in connection with the recently unveiled blackmailing plots, is a "slick lookin' gal."

Mrs. Evers was in the United States marshal's office yesterday.

"Who's that handsome gal over there?" asked Morrison.

"That's Helen Evers in the blackmail case."

"I'd like to meet her," said the octogenarian.

The handsome Helen was nothing loth and they conversed happily for several minutes.

SILVER SHOVEL STARTS SEWER FOR EVANSTON

Northern Suburb Believed the Source of Bathing Beach Infections.

Evanston made a silver shoveled ceremony out of ditch digging yesterday. The wielder of the silver shovel was Mayor Harry P. Pearsons. After he had turned a shovelful of Illinois loam then Thomas M. Sullivan of the sanitary district turned another.

There were speeches also by both Trustee Sullivan and Mayor Pearsons, delivered in the open air at Mulford street and Custor avenue. Leo J. Dwyer had charge of the ceremonies which marked the start of work on Evanston's $1,000,000 intercepting sewer project. Five hundred people attended the ceremony.

Giant Shovel Starts.

When the ceremonial shovelling was finished the Nash-Dowdle company, which has the excavating contract, started one of its giant shovels at the real work. The contract calls for completion not later than Nov. 1 1918.

"Evanston is the only point between Calumet and Waukegan," said Mayor Pearsons, "which pours its sewage into Lake Michigan. For more than ten years we have been paying sanitary district taxes without substantial returns. The lake has been kept in a polluted state, a constant menace to our health. This sewer, which will empty into the drainage canal west of the city, undoubtedly will lower our death rate, particularly from typhoid."

Evanston sewage, in the opinion of sanitary district officers has been the cause of sore eyes, typhoid, ear troubles, and other infections prevalent among bathers, especially those who used the north side beaches.

Previous Obstacles.

Previous attempts to get the building of the sewer under way have encountered political and other snags. For several years the city council of Evanston and the trustees of the sanitary district were deadlocked on the subject. This ended on Feb. 29, when the sanitary district agreed to build the system.

The main trunk of the sewer has a diameter of 10 feet and runs west on Lake street to the drainage canal's north branch. The south extension begins where the ceremonies were held yesterday and runs to Lake street. Another line of sewer will be laid along the lake front with pumps to force the sewage over the ridge. The complete system will drain the entire suburb.

In addition to the sewer itself Evanston will acquire a big lake front park to be known as Evanston park, which will be made of the materials from the excavation. This park will extend south from University place for eight or ten blocks.

SWEDES RECALL ILLINOIS COLONY

Descendants of Pioneers of 1846 Hold Celebration at Bishop Hill.

OLD HOUSES OPENED.

Kewanee, Ill., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—Two thousand visitors took part today in the Bishop Hill celebration, which was arranged by descendants of colonists to recall the founding of the colony seventy years ago by immigrants from Sweden.

A special train brought about 200 visitors from Chicago and automobiles and railroads brought in many from Kewanee, Galva, and all the other nearby towns. The program was conducted in the village square.

Colony buildings, many of them built by the first settlers, were open for inspection. There were relics and pictures of many of those who weer prominent in organization of the colony.

Streets and buildings were decorated with American and Swedish colors. A feature of the program was the reading of letters from colonists and descendants of colonists who were unable to attend the celebration.

The address of welcome was made by P. J. Stoneberg and the response by Capt. Eric Johnson of Clearwater, Cal., a son of the founder of the colony.

Other speakers were C. A. Trimble of Princeton, H. S. Henschen of Chicago, whose grandfather aided the Eric Jansonists in Sweden; Edwin A. Olson of Chicago, and Congressman Edward J. King of Galesburg.

Advances Taxes to Aid State.

Madison, Wis., Sept. 23.—Railroads operating in Wisconsin today paid $815,000 into the state treasury in the way of advance taxes. This money is not due until November, but with the general fund containing only $216,992 and the possibility of the state not being able to meet its September pay roll, the carriers came to the rescue.

AGENTS OF VILLA INCITE CARRANZA TROOPS TO REBEL

Emissaries Work Among Garrisons—Bandit Waits for U. S. Forces to Go.

El Paso, Tex., Sept. 23.—Agents have been sent into every Carranza garrison in Chihuahua state by Pancho Villa in an attempt to undermine the garrisons and stir up revolts. Two emissaries working on the Juarez garrison were caught today by Gen. Gonzales and are being held. By Carranza officials it is feared this is the first step by the bandit chief toward a threatened attack on border towns.

From natives fleeing from vicinity of Chihuahua City, Washington secret service men today obtained another authentic report spread by Villa after the Chihuahua City battle.

"In fifteen days after the 'gringo' army leaves Mexico, I'll be in possession of Chihuahua City and control the entire state of Chihuahua," the bandit chief is said to have declared.

Bandits Leave Americans Aloof.

The refugees said Villa apparently has changed his attitude toward Americans. They state his men say they were given instructions before the Chihuahua battle not to harm Americans or establishments owned by them.

Despite declarations by Carrancista authorities that military columns are vigorously pursuing Villa and his followers, an official Carrancista statement issued late today places Villa only twenty-two miles outside the capital of Chihuahua.

Construction of trenches outside Juarez in preparation for a possible Villista attack was started this afternoon by the garrison.

Investigate Border Crossing.

San Antonio, Tex., Sept. 23.—An investigation will be made of the act of eight members of the Texas cavalry who yesterday crossed the Rio Grande into Mexico near Rio Dosa and were fired on by Mexicans. Col. M. H. Barnum, chief of staff to Gen. Funston, made this announcement tonight, and added that if the action of the guardsmen was not justified they would be tried and punished.

Target Work for Chicagoans.

Brownsville, Tex., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—The machine gun troop of the Illinois cavalry will leave Brownsville by automobile trucks tomorrow morning for Harlingen, where the troop will go through two weeks of target practice, the first experience of this kind the machine gun troops have gone through since reaching the border July 4.

Chicago Negro Soldier Drowned.

Austin, Tex., Sept. 23.—John Wyatt, a sergeant in Company A. Eighth (Negro) Illinois infantry, was drowned late today while swimming in the Colorado river with several members of his company. An unidentified white soldier tried to rescue him. The body was recovered two hours later.

INSPECTOR IN ARMS PLANT IS IMPALED ON IRON FENCE.

American Acting for Canada Falls from Piazza in Utica, N. Y.—Picket Driven Into Eye.

Utica, N. Y., Sept. 23.—William Singerly McCartney, a graduate of Harvard university and inspector of arms for the Canadian government at a munitions plant here, was found impaled on an iron fence in this city early today. He had fallen from a piazza and the iron picket penetrated one eye so deeply that two policemen and a physician could not pull him off. He was conscious and the physician chloroformed him. Then the picket was sawed off and he was hurried to a hospital, where the iron was removed. His recovery is not expected.

McCartney is a member of a prominent Philadelphia family. His father is James S. McCartney, manager of the Hotel Majestic in that city.

THE MODERN CHICAGO WOMAN doesn't let her husband take THE TRIBUNE with him when he goes to work. She keeps it for herself and reads it carefully. Her husband buys another at the station or on the corner.

HAS 2 HUSBANDS; EACH WILLING TO DEFER TO OTHER

"I'll Make You a Present of Her," They Say in Unison.

A verbal battle between two men in the Desplaines street court yesterday, each of them emphatically contending that the same woman was his wife, culminated in one of them being placed under peace bonds. Each asserted he did not want the woman as his mate.

F. F. Kunze, 810 West Harrison street, appeared as the complaining witness against William Tetchners, 48 years old, head of the Tetchners Storage and Transfer company, 948 West Adams street. He had Tetchners arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct.

The Charge.

"He stole my wife!" Kunze exclaimed.

"How?" asked the judge.

"I was married Dec. 4, 1915. Last February I went to a hospital, and when I got out she wasn't home. I found her at his house."

"What were you doing with his wife? He says you have his wife," Judge Mahoney said.

"She's my wife. We were married five years ago," Tetchners answered.

"Now, I want to get this thing straight. Whose wife is she?" the judge demanded sternly.

"Mine!" chimed both.

"Yesterday he came to my home and told me he would shoot me if I didn't stop bothering him," declared Kunze.

"Where is the wife now?" demanded the court.

"She's keeping house for me," admitted Tetchners.

The Papers.

A note, dated Sept. 21, 1916, sent by Kunze to the woman, in which he addressed her as Mrs. M. Tetchners, was produced.

In the letter Kunze demands that she return his clothes "free of charge or you and your husband will have to stand the consequences."

"Do you want her now?" Judge Mahoney asked of Kunze.

"No, she's not my wife; I don't want her," he said.

"Neither do I," declared the defendant. "I got a divorce from her, but she's been keeping house for me."

Not a Solomon.

"Well, I can't decide who she belongs to. You will have to decide that yourselves," ruled the court.

The defendant was put under $500 bonds to keep the peace for one year.

OAK PARK BOYS CONFESS THEFTS

Police Guard Names of Youths Because of Their Families.

BROKE INTO HOMES.

Two boys of high school age, said to be sons of prominent Oak Park families, were taken into custody some day this week by the Oak Park police in connection with burglaries there of the homes of residents who left the village during the summer months, it was learned yesterday. The police admit they are in a quandary as to what action to take in the matter, and have temporarily given the youths into the custody of their parents without placing any charges against them.

The burglaries came to light, according to the police, after several boys were caught and admitted that they had entered the home of Dr. C. E. Hemingway at 600 North Kenilworth avenue while he was away a few weeks ago. They are said to have admitted that they pilfered small articles from the physician's residence, including part of a collection of rare coins worth several hundred dollars.

Nine Other "Jobs."

Nine other residences, according to the police, were entered during the summer months and articles such as gloves, savings banks, and opera glasses taken. The police say that the youths had similar articles in their possession when they were taken into custody, besides several revolvers and a quantity of cartridges.

The revolvers, the boys said, according to the police, were purchased by them. Some of the loot is said to have been sold to dealers.

Value Not Inconsiderable.

The stolen property is said to aggregate in value several hundred dollars. The police explain that because the youths are first offenders, they are now in the custody of their parents pending what action may be decided upon.

WOMAN HELD IN THEFT CASE

Mrs. Anna Thomas of Cleveland, O., wanted there in connection with a burglary, was arrested yesterday at 980 West Monroe street. It is said she and her husband, Jess, robbed the home of Rudolph Riechtmier, a real estate dealer, and stole jewelry, worth $345. When Mrs. Thomas was arrested she was wearing a diamond stickpin valued at $150, the police say, also a part of the loot. She denied complicity in the burglary.

Mrs. Thomas said hard luck was tagging her and she was an innocent woman.

"I didn't know my husband was a crook," she said. "I left him five weeks ago in Cleveland and came to Chicago to be free of him. I have been working as a cashier at Seventy-ninth and Halsted streets. As for the diamond, my husband gave me that as a present. I accepted it, not knowing he stole it."

GAS COMPANY WOULD SETTLE WITH COUNCIL

City Meets Offer Half Way by Naming Conference Board.

On the principle that it is "sometimes braver not to fight," the Peoples Gaslight and Coke company yesterday sought to enter into negotiations with the city over the pending suit to obtain $10,000,000 rebates for gas consumers.

Mayor Thompson's special gas committee received the proposal and a committee of four was appointed to discuss all the matters in controversy. This committee is composed of Chairman James H. Lawley of the gas committee, Chairman L. D. Sitts of the gas, oil, and electric light committee; Donald Richberg, the city's special gas attorney; and Edward Bemis, gas expert for the city.

Attacks City's Method.

E. G. Cowdery, president of the gas company, told the special gas committee that the city council's present method of dealing with gas matters is "practically hopeless." He then suggested the appointment of a small subcommittee to negotiate with representatives of the company.

"The company feels that it would be wise for it to make one more effort to adjust all difficulties with the city," he said. "In the matter of the litigation now pending we are willing to discuss the methods which should be used to settle the suit out of court. We think that the new rates are also involved and should be taken up at the same time.

"We insist on only one thing, and that is that the new rate ordinance permit us to change over from the candle power to the heat unit standard in the manufacture of gas. We are willing to give the city the lowest rates consistent with a fair return to the company."

Too Brave to Fight.

Later, speaking of the city's suit for $10,000,000 rebates, Mr. Cowdery said: "I don't want you aldermen to think that the gas company is ready to quit, but sometimes it is braver not to fight."

Ald. C. E. Merriam was inclined to be critical of the company's attitude, declaring it had withheld information from the city's investigators.

"The questions at issue," he added, "are more complicated than Mr. Cowdery seems to imply. We have five questions before us. First, the rate between 1911 and 1916, including the question of the $10,000,000 refund; second, the rate dating from 1916 on a candle power basis; third, the rate from the same period on a heat unit basis; fourth, the rate for a transitional period when the gas company's plant is being changed over to make gas on a heat unit basis, and, lastly, the whole situation as complicated by the sliding scale rates proposed by the company."

Mr. Cowdrey declared that the proposed change in the manufacture of gas is a necessity. He said the company's income in 1905 was $31 a customer, but it has now dropped to $24 owing to the increased cost of materials used for candle power gas. The company is prepared to spend $12,000,000, he declared, to build a new heat unit plant.

AMERICAN RELIEF WORK IN FRANCE DRAWS PRAISE.

Mrs. Henry Robbins, Chairman of Chicago Committee, Gets Report of Aid Extended.

Mrs. Henry S. Robbins, chairman of the Chicago committee of the American fund for French wounded, has just received from Isabel Stevens Lathrop, the president in France, a most enthusiastic report of the many valuable services American generosity is doing for France. Mrs. Lathrop urges that the work be kept up here energetically, as the help of willing Americans is still cordially desired by the French. In part Mrs. Lathrop wrote:

"We want your help—even more than you have given—and no one in this great work appreciates more than we what you have done up to this time. To speak of hospital necessities has always seemed to me as hopeless as a bottomless pit—so deep, indeed, that our few gifts would be lost in its cavernous crater. On the contrary, however, after going from hospital to hospital up as far as Verdun it makes one proud to say on behalf of France that its men are cared for as we might be well proud of should that day come when our own blood is called upon to resist an enemy that is sapping the vitality of the world. France now looks to us for socks, shirts, pajamas and woolen goods, bed linen, towels and all cotton goods, rubber goods of all kinds (hot water bags, air cushions, etc.), cotton in quantity, thermometers (French scale), gauze in quantity, and small comforts for the wounded men.

STATE UTILITIES BOARD ORDERS CAR DISTRIBUTION.

Ruling Provides for Division for Shipment of Grain According to Business Done by Firms.

Springfield, Ill., Sept. 23.—The Illinois state utility commission today adopted a conference ruling providing for the equitable distribution of freight cars for the shipment of grain. The ruling follows a hearing held several days ago, and is expected to relieve greatly the grain car shortage that is holding up shipments throughout the state.

The railroads of the state are ordered to compile data by Dec. 1 from all stations and elevators along the lines to show the amount of business done by the individual elevators during the last four years.

The cars will then be distributed pro rata.

SEVERS GALLING MARITAL BONDS AT MERRY RATE

Judge Thomson Starts to Clear Calendar of 2,300 Cases at Fifty a Day Clip.

Let 'er go! Stand in line if you want to get a divorce. Business is rushing, and attorneys will please be brief, so as to make way for the next candidate. When the bailiff in Judge Thomson's court rapped for order at the beginning of the September term there were 1,400 contested divorce suits and 900 uncontested on the calendar. The judge is hearing the default cases first at the merry rate of fifty a day. All day attorneys are roaring out the charges of desertion, infidelity, drunkenness, and nonsupport on behalf of their candidates.

Odd Cases Vary Monotony.

Yesterday the blasé throng in the courtroom pricked up their ears when the case of Helenhouse vs. Helenhouse was called. But these domestic fireworks paled a short time later when the bailiff shouted, "Joy vs. Joy!" Then the divorce mill continued to grind along without a creak. It must do so to keep up with the petitions which are filed in the Circuit and Superior court clerks' offices at an average of twenty-five a day.

The same scenes that occur daily in Judge Thomson's court are reproduced in Judge Gridley's court.

"Be brief," is the mandate of the court.

"Well, judge," the mistreated wife wails on the stand, "my husband knocked me down, kicked me, hit me on the head, and abandoned——"

Wife Cruel to "Six Footer."

"Next!"

A six footer lumbers up to the stand and explains in a high voice how his wife was cruel to him and left him to seek the society of other men.

"Next!" ejaculates the court crisply. And when the calendar is pretty well cleaned up the judges take their fountain pens, look at the certificates of evidence in the divorce cases, and sign a whole heap of official appearing documents, and jilted husbands and mistreated wives get their decrees. Then it's all over but the attorney fees and alimony.

Behind with Alimony, She Says.

Norman U. Stryker was cited by Judge Gridley to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt for failure to pay alimony to his wife, Mrs. Lyna Stryker, 4244 North Ashland avenue. Stryker, who is head of the commission firm of N. U. Stryker & Co., has property worth $40,000 and an income of $5,000, according to his wife. When she was granted separate maintenance it was stipulated that Stryker pay her $100 a month and $135 solicitor's fees. She charges he is behind $153 in his alimony payments.

Life in Georgia was not fast enough for his wife and she left him to return to Sweden, Fred Hanson testified before Judge Thomson in his suit for divorce against Mrs. Signa Hanson. She did not contest.

"I gave her everything I could," said Hanson. "We kept two maids and she didn't even have to lift a chair. She couldn't speak English when I married her, and so I hired a teacher for her. In addition I procured an instructor to give her singing and piano lessons, but even then she was not satisfied and wanted to be out late at nights."

Andrija Milakowic went to Austria to fight in the army, his wife, Sava Milakowic, testified and never returned or communicated with her. Her demand for a decree was taken under advisement.

Honored on Wedding Anniversary.

Arthur W. James, principal examiner for the city civil service commission, was presented with a silver perculator set yesterday in honor of the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. James. The wedding anniversary was celebrated at a dinner last night at the Hotel Sherman.

SNOBS, EH?

Hyde Park Student Replies to Jacob M. Loeb's Criticism.

Robert Lee Bennett, who is 15 years old, lives at 6157 University avenue and describes himself as "a boy who does not wear a wrist watch, felt that his alma mater, Hyde Park High was unjustly hammered by Jacob Loeb, president of the school board. He appointed himself attorney, therefore, for his fellows to appeal to "the greatest tribunal in the state of Illinois, the common people of the city of Chicago." Yesterday he walked into THE TRIBUNE office with the brief of his case for the public to pass on. Here it is:

To the People of the City of Chicago:

You are respectfully requested to visit Hyde Park High school and ascertain whether or not the charges made by Mr. Loeb against the pupils are true.

Why is it, if they are "snobs, wrist watch boys, trouble makers, pleasure lovers, and silk stocking aristocrats," that last fall, in the scholarship examinations at the University of Chicago, Hyde Park pupils were awarded four of the eight scholarships distributed among about fifty high schools?

If Hyde Park is a snobbish school, how is it that our athletic teams are always strong contenders for the championship of all sports, and are always composed of as clean, fair players as any?

HERE'S HYDE PARK GIRL'S VIEW OF LOEB 'SNOB' CHARGE

Miss Reichman Calls "Tribune" to Get Its Definition of the Word, Then Vents Her Views.

Miss Julia Reichman of 4318 Berkeley avenue called up to learn how THE TRIBUNE defines a "snob." One gathered that Miss Reichman was indignant, for she had some trouble modulating her voice. When informed that THE TRIBUNE agrees with Mr. Webster, she proceeded:

"Well, there may be a few thieves, and there may be a few snobs there, but I've been going there almost three years —it will be three years in February— and Hyde Park's a nice, aristocratic place. As for wrist watches, I don't see where he gets that at all. And as for automobiles, there may be some of them, but there aren't lines of them. So there!"

Miss Reichman was at first reluctant to tell her name, but when told that her reply would get to Mr. Loeb and the world at large only if the veil of anonymity were torn aside she did her bit.

Miss Dorothy Heyman, 4629 Ellis avenue, did more than display the courage of her convictions in replying to President Loeb's charges. She appeared in the school for an hour and a half with an ankle watch. It wasn't really an ankle watch, but she clasped her wrist watch just over her oxford tie and there it remained. She refused to tell who made the "dare" that caused her to offer the novel defense of the school.

Ocean to Ocean Record Broken By HUDSON SUPER-SIX

Broken by 15 Hours

The Winner of a Hundred Records Wins the Greatest One of All

The most coveted record in America has always been the Transcontinental Record. Five years ago a car became famous by making the trip from San Francisco to New York in 10 days and 15 hours. Last May, in glaring headlines, the newspapers announced a sensational record of 7 days, 11 hours and 53 minutes—made by a famous Eight. That record—then considered unbeatable—was later beaten by another car.

And now the Hudson Super-Six makes the trip in 5 days, 3 hours and 31 minutes. Breaking last spring's best record by more than two days. Breaking the best record made since then by 14 hours and 59 minutes.

The Winner in Every Great Test

The Hudson Super-Six has now won every record it has sought.

It has won every stock car record from 1 to 100 miles.

It has made faster speed with a stock motor than was ever made before—102.56 miles per hour.

It has broken all records for 24 hours —1,819 miles. That is 52 per cent farther than any stock motored car ever went in that time before.

It won the Pike's Peak Hill Climb—the greatest hill-climbing test ever held —against 20 great cars specially built for the climb.

And now, as a crowning achievement, it breaks the record which means more than all—the Transcontinental record.

All Due to Endurance

The Hudson Super-Six now holds all important records. All the records save those made with special racing cars such as buyers never get. And practically all of those records have been won by the Super-Six endurance. Cars with more power and cars with more speed have sought for nearly all these records. But the Super-Six won because it kept its pace. In test after test the Super-Six has been the only car that did not stop.

In this ocean to ocean trip of 3,476 miles, across mountains and deserts—mounting at one time two miles above sea level—the Super-Six averaged for the whole trip 28.14 miles per hour. Yet it went through 350 towns and cities under speed restrictions.

Friction Almost Nil

That is the great fact about the Hudson Super-Six. Its chiefest supremacy lies in endurance. The Super-Six invention added 80 per cent to our motor's efficiency, solely by reducing vibration. It reduced motor friction almost to nil.

By nearly ending friction it has nearly ended wear. And all these world's records are due mainly to that fact. The motor is small and light. It is similar in size to scores of light sixes. But the Super-Six invention has made it 80 per cent efficient. It has made it fully twice as enduring.

You will never want your car to do what the Super-Six has done. But you do want the car which shows this endurance. And every month's use will increase your regret if you fail to get the Super-Six.

Profits In Englefield

All Chicago Take Notice—Except the South Side. It Will, Anyway

GENTLEMEN—Ladies as well—you never read an advertisement published by Wm. E. Harmon & Co. in which we tried to sell Chicago residential real estate solely for investments—Did You? Why Not? Because, when we opened our Chicago office in 1909 we prohibited this class of advertising, history showing such investments to be ordinarily disappointing.

Now Read This Marvelous Record. Roughly speaking, eight hundred persons purchased 1,180 lots in our first three Chicago Subdivisions, opened a little over five years ago. Since then some of this property has sold for 250% advance over our first prices—some for 200%. Hundreds can, or have, doubled their money, and we do not believe there is one buyer of a residential lot who could not get more than his original cost, except in the case of about thirty lots we purposely held very high.

REASON—As nearly as we can judge, this result has been obtained: First, because we buy right up against the built-up section of the city; second, we purchase with great discrimination and close economy; third, we establish and maintain the highest type of improvements and embellishments; fourth, because we primarily attract homeseekers, as is attested by the fact that on the first 718 lots deeded in Chicago (the balance still being under contract) there are now 426 homes constructed—one family to fourteen family buildings, and others being started almost daily.

Is there a House in the world that can show such a marvelous record with its first 800 customers? And, what is even more interesting, our five Subdivisions opened later are building fast, and fast reaching the point of profit taking for every one.

In the face of this remarkable showing we have come to the conclusion that investments in Harmon Property, backed by Harmon Service and the City of Chicago, are about as safe and sure to return a profit as anything on earth. We have, therefore, selected locations in Englefield, equivalent to about 15% of the whole, to recommend to the North Side, the West Side and the public at large.

If the choice is left to us you will have the benefit of all our experience and most careful judgment in the selection. We especially recommend the cheaper lots on Robey, Winchester and Lincoln Streets, as a smaller sum is involved in the purchase, and the ultimate value of the whole property must be approximately the same. These lots are $390—$490—$560.

$10 can be sent with the express understanding that if on examination you want your money back for any reason, or no reason at all, it will be cheerfully refunded.

We make this mail order offer to the people of Chicago as well as those living elsewhere because this city is so big it is about as easy to get from here to Indianapolis as from the extreme north to the south side, so that many Chicagoans who cannot examine first will not hesitate to send $10 because of their faith in us.

Remember, there are only a few lots we care to recommend to mail order investors, and these will be quickly taken up, so do not hesitate to mail $10. You take no risks.

We have already sold $170,000 worth of property—one-fourth of the whole—and our advertising campaign has just begun.

The south siders are coming by hundreds—and buying for homes. Don't wait too long.

U. S. PREPARES FOR QUIZ ON RAIL AFFAIRS

Government Ownership Will Be Discussed at Meeting on Nov. 20.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., Sept. 23.—(Special)—Preparations are being made by government agencies here for railroad investigation under the Newlands resolution by a join committee of congress, which will take the center of the stage immediately after election. The hearings begin Nov. 20, probably in Chicago.

This investigation will go into all transportation conditions of the United States relating to interstate and foreign commerce, and is expected to determine the trend of further legislation.

The principal issues that will confront the committee are:

Whether there shall be absolute government ownership of the railroads as well as of other public utilities, such as telegraph, wireless, cable, telephone, and express companies; or,

Whether there shall be continued federal regulation, including requirement of federal incorporation or control of incorporation of railroads, with increased powers given to the interstate commerce commission.

URGE U. S. OWNERSHIP.

Figures will be placed before the committee by advocates of government ownership to show that the government, by owning the roads, could afford to reduce freight and passenger rates 50 per cent by economic methods that would not impair the service.

It will be shown that the income from the railroads in one year would be nearly one-third the cost to the government of taking them over.

In the year 1914 the total operating revenue of the roads of the United States having an income of $100,000 or more was $3,047,019,908.

The total operating expenses in that year was $2,200,313,159.

The net revenue was $846,706,749.

With this net revenue, it is pointed out by the ownership advocates, the government could with ease pay interest on its investment.

ROADS PUBLIC UTILITIES.

The railroads are being valued now under the federal act of 1913, and it is generally estimated that their value will be between $9,000,000,000 and $10,000,000,000 with the capital stock placed at $16,000,000,000.

The railroads, it will be pointed out, are essentially public in their nature, receiving a tax from the people of $3,047,019,908, which more than doubles the amount collected by the government itself, approximately $1,250,000,000 a year. By allowing individuals to collect this tax, it will be argued, the government is farming out the collection of taxes.

The power of the roads, it will be contended, is so great that it is more enormous than the government itself. This power is too great to be entrusted to private hands will be the claims advanced by those advocating government ownership.

HIT PAY OF RAIL HEADS.

In the investigation great stress will be laid upon the fact that railway executives are paid much larger salaries than government officials, some even receiving ten times the amount of public officials with the same responsibility.

The opportunity for graft, the advocates of government ownership say, is greater in private ownership of railroads than in government ownership.

Proof of this will be through reference to the $20,000,000 looting of the New York, New Haven and Hartford, and the $100,000,000 looting of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, to gifts of millions to railway managers, and to the salaries of from $50,000 to $100,000 a year, drawn by railroad presidents, while they are interested at the same time in subsidiary corporations.

A greater measure of economy will come with government ownership, it is claimed. The federal authorities, it is said, will eliminate the waste of competition, eliminate the economic waste of parallel lines, and the waste that would be entailed in the payment of thousands of employés required to regulate the railroads.

CALL ROADS WASTEFUL.

Advocates of ownership advance the theory that the railroads now make enough money, but allow an enormous waste that could be eliminated with public advantage.

One of the principal arguments against government ownership will be the claim that it will bring into politics the 1,695,483 employé (as shown June 30, 1914) and that the efficiency of the roads when handled by the government will be less than by private hands.

QUESTIONS TO DECIDE.

In the matter of continued regulation the congressional subcommittee will have before it for consideration a number of recommendations from the interstate commerce commission. The principal recommendations are as follows:

1. Increase the commission from seven to nine members to take care of the vastly increased business.
2. Confer on the commission power to regulate wages in order to avoid strikes in the future.
3. Give the commission full authority to investigate expenditures by railroads.
4. Allow the commission to regulate securities.
5. Allow either the commission or the department of justice to name the receivers for roads which fail.
6. Include common carriers under the provisions of the Clayton anti-trust act, which makes it unlawful for any person at the same time to be a director in two or more competing corporations.

Would Probe Expenses.

There is constant contention now as to the power of the commission to investigate expenditures. A case is pending before the Supreme court of the District of Columbia in which the Louisville and Nashville railroad refused to answer regarding the expenditures of that road.

The commission claims the need of being informed of all expenditures to tell whether rates are reasonable or not, and whether money raised, which is in the form of taxes, is properly applied.

Receiverships of railroads have been a great source of scandal, and it has been customary for the court to appoint those responsible for wrecking the road as receivers. It is claimed that the interstate commerce commission or the department of justice should name receivers for railroads, just as the comptroller of the currency appoints them to national banks.

FLIRTS, BEWARE!

Policewoman Who Says Man Winked at Her in La Salle Street Station.

Mrs. Florence Van Amber

"BLINKER" IS FINED $10, BUT NOT FOR BLINKING.

It Is All Because Policewoman Says Alleged Flirt Threatened to "Get" Her Job.

Two more alleged flirts were given fines yesterday by Judge La Buy. One was in a fair way to escape on the plea that his apparent winking at a policewoman was caused by hay fever until she testified he threatened to "get her job."

The "blinker" was Louis W. Kaestner of 1322 Eddy street. Policewoman Florence Van Amber had testified he had tried to flirt with her in the Grand Central station.

"I never tried to flirt. My hay fever made me blink," said Kaestner. "I'm a respectable married man with a business. I didn't have time to flirt."

The judge told the policewoman he believed she had been hasty. Then the threat to get the policewoman's job developed. Kaestner said she had mistaken his remark. But the judge fined him $10 and costs.

James Collins, who was charged by Mrs. Agnes Dean with having tried to induce her to go with him to a matinee, was fined $25 and costs.

BEDROOM SNAKE HUNT ON AT HOTEL MORRISON.

Guests Turn Back Sheets with Care After Big Reptile Is Smoked Out by Wreckage Fire.

They turned back the sheets with care last night at the Morrison hotel before jumping into bed. For a large spotted snake was discovered and led into captivity in the ruins of the Boston Oyster house, which is being wrecked to make way for the other section of the hotel.

The Morrison snake is close to six feet in length. None of the amateur zoologists at the hotel, where the snake was placed on exhibition, were able to decide on its species. It will be turned over to Cy De Vry at the Lincoln park zoo.

"It looks to me like a house snake," said a bellhop. "They eat rats."

The snake was smoked out by a fire burning up wreckage. It was captured by Al Roemer, superintendent of construction for the new hotel. He turned it over to Manager James Galbaugh.

PACKERS QUIT WEIGHING IN PAPER CONTAINERS OF MEAT.

Western Firms, Convicted of Disobeying New York Law, Agree to Mark Net Weight on Packages.

New York, Sept. 23.—[Special.]—Western packers who have been convicted of violating the law by selling paper containers at the price of ham and bacon today informed Markets Commissioner Hartigan that they would live up to the state law in the future, although it is estimated the decision will cost them many thousands of dollars a year.

The decision follows the action of City Judge Joseph H. Beall of Yonkers, who recently fined Armour & Co. and Swift & Co. $100 each for failing to mark the net weight of meat in containers on the paper wrappers. Both decisions were appealed.

The Armour conviction was confirmed by the County court of Westchester, and the packers announced they would carry the case to the United States Supreme court.

John Farrell, state superintendent of weights and measures, ordered the arrest of every retailer who sold ham and bacon in containers without the net weight of the meat being plainly marked. The retailers immediately notified the western packers they would decline to handle their product unless the law was complied with.

AUTO ROBBERS FELL GIRL; FLEE WITH $745 PAYROLL.

Miss Mary Pinter Knocked Down by Highwayman on Her Way to Leyser-Green Hat Company.

Holdup men in an automobile got away with $745.15 yesterday when one of them knocked down Miss Mary Pinter, a cashier for the Leyser-Green Hat company, 849 Washington boulevard.

Miss Pinter had just drawn the money from the Midcity bank at Madison and Halsted streets and was within a half block of her destination when a man stepped out of an alley, knocked her down, seized her bag, leaped into an automobile containing two other men, and made his escape.

The girl was not hurt, but was hysterical over her loss.

QUITS TYPEWRITER FOR LIFE ON HER HOG RANCH.

First Swift & Co. Woman Pensioner Retires to Go West and Raise Stock for Her Employers.

After twenty-five years of service, in which she has not been "late a single minute," Miss Grace Monroe left the service of Swift & Co. yesterday, the first woman to receive the benefit of the recently established pension system.

Miss Monroe is going to Wyoming, where she says she is going to raise hogs to sell to Swift & Co. She was graduated from a business college in Albany twenty-five years ago, and Swift & Co. were her first and last employers.

Under the pension system which went into effect Aug. 1 all employés who have been in the employ of the firm for twenty-five years and have reached the age of 50 for women and 60 for men will receive a pension equal to 50 per cent of their wages. The maximum is $5,000 and the minimum $240 a year. Miss Monroe owns a 40 acre ranch in Wyoming.

U. S. PROTESTS TO ENGLAND OF LITTLE AVAIL

War Dictatorship by the Allies Has Cost Nation Millions in Trade and Prestige.

ARTICLE NO. VIII.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—President Wilson has achieved only failure in his efforts to protect the commerce, communication, and sovereignty of the United States from the aggressions by Great Britain and its allies which have cost American shippers millions of dollars in trade losses and the American people increasing humiliation and lessening of national prestige.

England, on the plea of military necessity, has established itself as a world dictator, and, without effective opposition by the Wilson administration, has made the United States almost as subservient to its ends as it has other neutrals far less powerful.

Trade Disrupted.

England has disrupted the legitimate trade of the United States with the neutral countries of Europe and completely prohibited exportation of many American products to Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and Holland.

England continues to censor American mail in defiance of the guaranties of international law, even mail passing between American postoffices and American diplomatic correspondence, and stands accused by the administration of appropriating American trade information in intercepted letters for the benefit of British merchants.

England continues to censor and confiscate American cablegrams to all parts of the world, even American official messages under certain conditions, and to allow the transmission of secret cablegrams only in a cipher registered with the British government.

Americans Blacklisted.

England has blacklisted many American business concerns and forbidden British merchantmen to carry their cargoes to any part of the world.

England has imposed a close supervision upon the importation of rubber and other products from British possessions into the United States by American manufacturers and upon the exportation of the finished articles.

The failure of the president to invoke more effective measures than verbal protests to protect the rights of Americans from British aggression has caused the widespread conviction that Mr. Wilson is unneutral, that he designedly has shaped his policy so as to favor the allies. He has met this criticism with the argument that "property rights can be vindicated by damages and no modern nation can decline to arbitrate such claims." He indicated that his protests were merely intended as a basis for damage claims in a colossal lawsuit with England after the war.

In the midst of his campaign for reelection, however, the president suddenly made a show of taking drastic action against Great Britain. He caused congress in the closing days of the last session to pass a series of retaliation measures authorizing him to carry out reprisals upon Great Britain for interfering with American trade and to halt the departure of vessels refusing to carry the cargoes of blacklisted American firms.

Whether the president will use this retaliation authority remains to be seen. Germany is threatening to renew the submarine campaign unless he takes more drastic action against the allies, and there is no diminution of the sentiment throughout the country that Mr. Wilson has been lenient with England if not deliberately "playing England's game." The politicians would not be surprised were Mr. Wilson to invoke the retaliation measures between now and election day.

Summary of Situation.

The record of the administration in dealing with aggressions by the allies upon American rights may be summarized as follows:

Blockade—President Wilson addressed eighteen notes to Great Britain and France protesting against the illegal blockade of Holland and the Scandinavian countries and asking the release of various cargoes among more than 2,500 ships seized and detained by the allies. Great Britain replied in twenty-two and France in two notes refusing to comply with the demands and requests. Interference with American trade continues.

Contraband — President Wilson addressed two notes to Great Britain protesting against violation of international law in seizing American shipments as contraband of war. Great Britain replied in four notes refusing to change its practice, which still continues.

Cables—President protested in seventeen notes against general and specific instances of censorship and confiscation of American cablegrams. Great Britain in twenty notes and France in one rejected the pleas and laid down rules for cable communication, in which the administration acquiesced. Supervision continues.

Mails—President protested in two notes against seizure, censorship, and confiscation of American letter mail, opening and search of state department sealed pouches, and appropriation of American trade information. Great Britain and France replied in one note, each refusing to desist from the practice, denying the charge of stealing American trade secrets, and assuring the president that the censorship would be made as little vexatious to the United States as possible. Censorship continues, with increased complaint from American victims.

Steal American Flag.

Flag—President protested against the use by British ships of the American flag to deceive the enemy. Great Britain politely but firmly declined to accede to the request. Offense repeated afterward, but not recently.

Trade—President protested against interference with American trade under British trading with the enemy act. Great Britain replied that the American anxiety was unfounded.

Blacklist—President protested against the blacklisting of American firms by the allies on the ground that such firms are controlled by German capital and that trading with them would be trading with the enemy. Two months have passed without a reply from either Great Britain or France.

Americans—President in two notes demanded the release of an American, one Piepenbrink, forcibly taken from a ship by France and detained by Great Britain. England in three notes and France in one discussed the demand, but finally the British released the American "as a friendly act."

Seize American Ships.

American ships—President protested against the seizure and confiscation of the Wagner fleet of American ships. Great Britain ignored demand and placed ships in British service.

Sovereignty—President, charging violation of American sovereignty, demanded release of thirty-five noncombatants, subjects of the central powers, forcibly removed from the American steamer China in the Pacific ocean by a British cruiser. These passengers were seized last February while on their way from Shanghai to Manila and were taken to Sydney, Australia. As the result of repeated protests the state department announced yesterday that Great Britain had agreed to release the persons and to take them, not to Manila, but to Shanghai. England does not promise not to seize them again if they attempt to reach Manila.

Neutrality—President in three notes protested against the invasion of American territorial waters by British warships. England in two notes denied such invasions and sought to justify patrolling of American coasts by British fleet. President protested against search of American steamer Cebu by British cruiser in Philippine waters within three mile limit and England apologized.

Prize court—President denied the validity of British prize court decisions not based on international law. England disputed president's contentions. No change in prize court procedure affected.

Threats Without Result.

More than 250 notes have passed between the state department and the chancellories of the allies in regard to the depredations upon American trade, censorship of mails and cables, and other outrages to which the most powerful neutral nation in the world has been subjected. The president has poured forth several hundred thousand words embodying every conceivable argument and plea to England to desist from its offensive and ruinous procedure and has resorted in some instances to threats to employ other means to obtain redress.

Not even these threats, however, have swerved the allies from their course and Mr. Wilson has not made good his threats to adopt a more effective procedure.

Furthermore, the president, while protesting against the illegal practices, has entered into elaborate arrangements with the allies for the transaction of the foreign business of American concerns under the unlawful supervision of which he has complained.

Although he refused to recognize the validity of the blockade he allowed the trade advisers of the state department to negotiate the release of importations from Germany under the blockade rules and permitted a high official of the state department to suggest to the British government the issuance of letters of assurance to American exporters which would obtain passage for their goods through the blockading forces.

The British government responded with alacrity to this suggestion, which placed the American government in the attitude of acquiescing in the blockade and soon established at the British embassy in Washington an elaborate system of supervising and approving American shipments to the neutral countries of northern Europe. No American could ship goods with safety without the O. K. of the British embassy.

Likewise while condemning the blacklisting of American firms as illegal, the state department has recognized it so far as to ask England to remove the ban from particular firms, and this England has done with significant alacrity.

The British government now regulates the amount of each article that may be shipped to Holland and the Scandinavian countries and practically supervises American commerce with these countries and through agencies operating on American soil.

And this is our answer.

In the series of Chandler Sixes which will follow our completion of production of the present series, we shall continue to build as the heart of this great car the same Marvelous Motor which, with some minor refinements from time to time, has distinguished the Chandler for four years past, the same Chandler-design and Chandler-build motor which has become famous for its power and flexibility and simplicity and economy. And we shall continue the beautiful walnut-panelled tonneau-cowl type of bodies—with soft, deep cushions and lustrous finish—which preceded many recent "new models" by many months. And the price cannot be lowered. In all probability it will be higher.

Ask any Chandler dealer or any owner of any Chandler—whether Type 14 or 15 or 16 or 17—if he would have us build some other type of motor.

Ask yourself what change could make the present Chandler more beautiful in body design.

This is our answer to the thousands who have asked. THE CHANDLER YOU MAY BUY THIS WEEK WILL BE JUST AS UP-TO-DATE NEXT SPRING AS THE CHANDLERS WE SHALL BE BUILDING THEN.

Here are the facts regarding the great new HOTEL COMMONWEALTH. Read every line of them:

EVERYBODY KNOWS THAT NEW YORK IS BY FAR THE GREATEST HOTEL CITY IN THIS COUNTRY

It has SEVENTY-FOUR hostelries of 200 rooms and upwards, each—and there are ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-ONE OTHERS having 50 or more rooms each. Complete in construction, magnificent in fittings and furnishings, perfect in service, exquisite in cookery—the world already knows of these things as being characteristic of the great caravansaries of New York.

But there is nothing really surprising in all this. People by the thousands upon thousands are constantly coming to New York, on business or pleasure bent, and they MUST be housed and fed. Close upon a QUARTER OF A MILLION out-of-town visitors arrive in New York EVERY DAY, and it is estimated that their stay averages four and one-half days.

Allowing the reasonable amount of $10 as the daily average outlay of each visitor—of course not all of it, however, in hotels—and you may figure for yourself the enormous amount of "outside" money that is spent every day on Manhattan Island. If to this be added the great outlay by resident New Yorkers in their hotels—and it is well known that the city dwellers are more and more coming to be hotel patrons, especially as to the restaurant portion of them—the total DAILY expenditure amounts to staggering figures.

And that gives a reason for another fact: New York hotels PAY. So true is this that the other day a newspaper, in the course of an article headed "New York a Bonanza for Hotel Keepers," included this striking paragraph:

> "It is significant that New York's three newest large hotels, the McAlpin, the Belmont and the Biltmore, are all paying handsome dividends. The Belmont is said to earn forty per cent upon its stock, and the Biltmore a smaller return on much larger capital. All the leading hotels turn away applicants."

THE HOTEL COMMONWEALTH, to be erected in the very heart of New York—in the Broadway-Seventh-Avenue-46th-to-52d-Street district—will be not only the largest hotel in New York, but

The Greatest Hotel in the World.

It is planned to cover an entire city block front, to be 28 stories high, to contain approximately 2,500 rooms and to involve a total expenditure of $15,000,000.

Construction according to these plans and figures means that substantially 150,000 shareholders are to own and control the management of the HOTEL COMMONWEALTH.

It is the greatest and most comprehensive co-operative enterprise ever undertaken in this country.

In a co-operative organization the members are both investors and patrons, capital and patronage being merged into one. That the co-operative idea is efficient is proven by the success of over 120,000 such enterprises in European countries. Their wide extent and their enormous profits are too well known to require argument or discussion. The point to be made here is simply that the HOTEL COMMONWEALTH of New York is to be an application of the time-tested successful idea of co-operation to the GREATEST HOTEL FIELD IN THE UNITED STATES!

The HOTEL COMMONWEALTH is to be owned an controlled exclusively by its members. The capital needed to establish it is being daily supplied by those who will provide its principal patronage. That is why ONLY ONE membership share, at $100, will be issued to any one person. The patronage of 150,000 membership shareholders will assure a full volume of business for HOTEL COMMONWEALTH from the start—and continuously thereafter. IT WILL BE A SUCCESS THE MINUTE ITS DOORS ARE OPENED!

The corporation which is to build and operate the hotel is organized under the laws of Delaware, with a capitalization of $15,000,000, divided into 150,000 shares (all common stock) of the par value of $100 each. There are to be no bonds or preferred stock. Every shareholder will be on an equal basis with every other, and subscriptions are to be limited to one share to each individual, except the directors, who are obliged by the laws of the State of Delaware to own three shares each.

Now, how does all this interest YOU—tend to YOUR profit, convenience and personal comfort?

THIS IS THE ANSWER:

BENEFITS

A share of stock in the Commonwealth Hotel Construction Corporation is to benefit the investor—under arrangements calculated to restrict these benefits and privileges to shareholders alone—as follows:

1. REBATES up to 20 per cent will be given to the shareholders, out of annual net earnings, on all their personal expenditures for food and lodgings at the HOTEL COMMONWEALTH during the fiscal year.
2. REBATES up to 20 per cent will be given to the shareholder, out of such net earnings, on all expenditures for food and lodging at the HOTEL COMMONWEALTH made by any one who presents such shareholder's card of introduction.
3. DIVIDENDS to all shareholders from net profits.
4. DISCOUNTS on purchases of merchandise made by shareholders from mercantile houses through the Shopping Bureau of HOTEL COMMONWEALTH.

PRIVILEGES

1. PREFERENCE whenever possible will be given to shareholders in the reservation of rooms.
2. CLUB CONVENIENCES are provided for shareholders, including reading rooms, billiards, indoor golf course, etc.
3. FREE USE of gymnasium, shower baths, squash courts, handball courts, and swimming pool.

Who will build HOTEL COMMONWEALTH? It will be designed, built, decorated, equipped and furnished throughout under the Hoggson Single Contract Building Method, by Hoggson Bros. of New York. In the past 25 years this firm has designed and constructed more bank buildings, in all parts of the country—to name only one class of structure—than any other building organization.

Who will manage HOTEL COMMONWEALTH? Mr. H. L. Merry, formerly of the firm of Merry & Boomer, who is one of the most prominent hotel managers in the world, and who leading hostelries in Boston, New Haven and elsewhere—has been employed by the company has been associated in the management of the McAlpin and Claridge Hotels in New York—also to assist in the initial planning, as well as in the construction and equipment. He is also to be manager of the HOTEL COMMONWEALTH when it is completed.

ROOM RATES

HOTEL COMMONWEALTH is designed to meet the desires of every person who may visit New York City. The prices of rooms will be lower than in any other first class hotel.

The plans call for a large number of single rooms, with bath, which can be let at the rate of $1.50 per day, and other rooms at from $2 to $5.

UNUSUAL FEATURES

In the plan of the HOTEL COMMONWEALTH the following unique features are provided:

Restaurants with various scales of prices.

Separate floors with exceptional display rooms for buyers and salesmen.

A nursery with attendants to care for small children.

A separate floor for unattended women guests.

A hospital with physicians and trained nurses in attendance.

Turkish and Russian baths.

SHOPPING BUREAU

For the convenience of the shareholders it is planned to establish a SHOPPING BUREAU. The custom of so large a number of shareholders is so desirable to business houses that negotiations with leading department and retail stores are now pending whereby stockholders may secure material discounts on their purchases.

HOTEL AND CLUB

The HOTEL COMMONWEALTH plan provides, to all intents and purposes, for a club—a co-operative club to be formed for the purpose of building, owning and using the greatest hotel in the world. But instead of club dues there are only CLUB BENEFITS—and, in addition, REBATES and DIVIDENDS.

THE MEN BEHIND THE ENTERPRISE

Naturally, you want to know not only about HOTEL COMMONWEALTH itself, but your instinctive query is: "Who are behind it?" Here are some of the names:

CHARLES H. INGERSOLL, the president, is head of Robt. H. Ingersoll & Bro., watch manufacturers, New York.

THEO. C. VISSCHER, the vice-president, is an architect and a director of the Postal Life Insurance Co., New York.

W. J. HOGGSON was formerly president and general manager of Hoggson Bros., New York.

EDW. SLOSSON is vice-president of W. G. Cornell & Co., engineers, New York.

CHARLES F. KINSMAN is president of the Sterling Bronze Co., New York.

R. A. SKINNER is eastern representative of the Milwaukee Chair Co.; office, New York.

IN OLD VINCENNES STANDS CAPITOL OF GREAT WEST

First Seat of Government of Northwest Territory May Be Destroyed.

IS NOW IN PRIVATE HANDS.

Who knows that the first capital of the great Northwest territory is still standing? Who has heard of the "Governor's palace" on the far banks of the Wabash? This is the first of a series of articles by Mr. Hyde describing little known historic spots in Indiana, which now is celebrating its hundredth anniversary as a state. The second article will appear on Tuesday.

BY HENRY M. HYDE.

Vincennes, Ind., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—

Through the sycamores the candle lights are gleaming,
On the banks of the Wabash, far away!

On a lot in a neglected and undesirable part of town stands the great brick house. One need not know its history to be impressed by its solid and venerable dignity. Cut off from the rest of the city by railroad tracks, surrounded by factories, it still instantly suggests the spacious days of old.

It was probably the first house built of burned brick west of the Allegheny mountains. But that is the least of its claims to the attention—and to something like the devotion—of the people of the United States. For this is the governor's palace, from which was ruled for a period of years a greater empire than Napoleon ever mastered.

Built in 1804.

The great old house was built in 1804 by Gen. William Henry Harrison, later president of the United States. It was the official residence of "Old Tippecanoe" during his incumbency as the first governor of the Northwest territory. Let it be remembered that from the Northwest territory were later carved the states of Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, and Wisconsin. From his "palace" on the banks of the Wabash in old Vincennes Gen. Harrison ruled not only over the Northwest territory but also for a time over the whole of the vast Louisiana purchase, west of the Mississippi river.

Here at Vincennes was the first capital and seat of government of the whole great middle west. Harrison was its first governor, awing the Indians with his great brick palace at a time when the second war with Great Britain and the massacre of Fort Dearborn were still eight years in the future.

In Splendid Condition.

How fortunate that in the middle west, with all its careless disregard of historical monuments, such a unique and splendid memorial should still be standing, almost untouched either by time or by the hands of men!

How almost sacrilegious that what should be a middle western shrine should still be in the ownership of a private corporation and—in spite of the efforts of the Vincennes chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution—in somewhat imminent danger of being torn down to make space for the erection of a new boiler house or some other addition to the plant of the Vincennes water company!

The governor's palace was bought by the water company a few years ago from another private owner for a sum somewhat less than $6,000.

This year Indiana is celebrating the centennial of its admission as a state to the union in 1816. Many of its rich and thriving cities are giving elaborate historical pageants in honor of the anniversary. Scores of thousands of dollars are being spent in stage settings, costumes, and temporary displays. Vincennes itself put on a pageant which cost $8,000. The climax of the year's celebration comes in Indianapolis next month.

Who Will Start It?

Is it possible that there are not somewhere in the state people who will see the wisdom of spending the small sum necessary to make the old governor's palace a perpetual monument of the great days when Illinois was merely a county of Indiana territory, when Vincennes was the capital of the whole Mississippi valley?

Doubtless the stockholders of the water company, if the national importance of the project were laid before them, would approach the matter of selling their property to be dedicated as a historic monument in a patriotic and broad minded spirit.

Fortunately when Gen. Harrison built his stately mansion in the wilderness he laid his foundations broad and deep and reared a superstructure that is calculated to stand for centuries. The walls of solid brick are more than three feet thick and the framework is made of solid black walnut timbers, hand hewn from the logs, and fastened together with thick wooden pins.

Spacious Rooms.

On the left as one enters the front door is the old council chamber, a high and spacious room with one semi-circular end where, no doubt, stood the official desk of the governor. Across the wide hall are the similarly high and spacious reception rooms.

On the second floor are the big sleeping chambers, some of them quaintly built up into semi-circular forms. One finds a suggestion in the presence of capacious wine closets of the hospitality which Gen. Harrison dispensed in what was then almost a savage wilderness.

In the big cellars under the whole house one gets a grimmer reminder of the old days. Here one finds still the big open fireplaces, with their swinging cranes, at which, safe from immediate danger, the servants might run bullets and make other preparations for defense against Indian attacks. And at the back—though now walled up—is pointed out the location of the entrance to an ancient tunnel which led underground from the governor's palace to the banks of the Wabash, not "far away." The tunnel, so runs tradition, was dug so that if too closely pressed by Indian or other besiegers the governor and his family might escape in canoes without their flight being immediately detected, or might draw water for the supply of the household and the garrison.

Held by D. A. R.

The D. A. R. of Vincennes, through the courtesy of the water company, have at present charge of the old Harrison mansion. They have assembled many fine pieces of old colonial furniture in the rooms and in one have collected a set of spinning wheels and other relics of the days when every home was its own factory.

So far as is possible while the building remains in private ownership the old palace is already maintained as a place of historic pilgrimage. But there always remains the danger that at any time it may be torn down to make room for an enlargement of the water works.

If for any reason Indiana is not able to buy the property, is not the preservation of the first capital of the northwest territory a matter which should interest all the great states which formed part of it?

A thousand or two dollars from each of them would make an ample fund. By whom and in what way shall the work be started?

PROTESTS USE OF FLAG

Capt. E. R. Lewis Appeals to Wilson to Stop His Managers Using Colors with President's Pictures.

CAPT. E. R. LEWIS, past president of the American Flag Day association, yesterday telegraphed to President Wilson, protesting against the use by the Democratic party of posters in which a picture of the president is surrounded by pictures of the American flag. The telegram reads:

"The American Flag Day association protests against your campaign managers using the United States flag on posters bearing pictures of your honor, which have appeared in Chicago and many other cities. This is a violation of the statutes of Illinois, as well as thirty-six other states and four territories. Action will be taken against the campaign managers if it is not stopped at once."

HETTINGER BOY SHOWS MILD INTEREST IN RAZOR.

Boy Leans Forward to View Blackened Blade with Which Murder Was Committed.

Edgar Hettinger, the 19 year old youth on trial for the murder of Mrs. Agnes Middleton, in Judge Pam's court, evinced a little interest yesterday when the razor with which the murder was committed was produced.

The youth, who has maintained a stolid indifference, leaned forward in his chair, viewed the rusted and blackened blade, and then slumped back in his chair again.

Dr. Henry G. W. Reinhardt, coroner's physician, described the condition of the apartment at 3267 Armitage avenue when he was notified of the murder. Mrs. Middleton's head had been struck in two places, he said, and her throat cut. Detectives Schultz and Alcock testified to having arrested Hettinger, and the Rev. Carl Hanson, a Methodist minister, told of passing Mrs. Middleton's flat on the night of the murder.

LOSES $1,600 TO SHARPER

An "inspector of money" aboard a Northwestern train fleeced Joseph Perfile of Toledo, O., of $1,600 yesterday while the train was standing at the Kedzie avenue station. Perfile, a laborer, was on his way to Salt Lake City with his earnings of a lifetime. A well dressed stranger approached him and said he was an "official of the company." He inspected Perfile's ticket and then asked if he would be responsible for his money. Perfile turned over his $1,600, and the stranger disappeared.

GET $6,000 GEMS AT BEVAN HOME

Porch Climbers Loot House at Lake Forest—Family Present.

Dr. Arthur Dean Bevan's country house in Lake Forest was looted of nearly $6,000 in jewelry by porch climbers on Friday night it became known yesterday when the Lake Forest police asked coöperation of Chicago police.

A list of the stolen jewelry contains the following:

One bowknot of pearls	$ 300
One platinum pin of forty diamonds	1,000
One woman's watch	300
One wrist watch	100
One pearl rope	4,000
One medallion, pearls and diamonds	200
One stickpin and one pendant	No value placed

Family at House.

Dr. and Mrs. Bevan were at home during the evening. There are six servants in the house and all of these were on the premises. An investigation proved the thieves entered by scaling the front porch and entering through a cut screen. The watchdog that ordinarily sleeps on the front porch was away.

The robbery took place between 8 and 10 o'clock. Mrs. Bevan said she heard a noise in the upper part of the house around 8 o'clock, but she thought it was one of the servants and made no point of it.

Overlook Other Jewels.

Evidently the burglars were frightened away, for many thousands of dollars in jewelry and other valuables were overlooked.

About the same time the garage of Joseph O'Neill, who lives in Oakwood avenue, a half mile from the Bevan residence, was entered and an automobile stolen. It is believed the thieves made their escape in this machine.

The Chicago police have set a watch on all pawnshops in the hope of tracing the jewelry.

"MYSTERY GIRL" WANTS DR. GAIRDNER TO TESTIFY.

Woman Accused of Theft of Silver Bag Will Ask Austin Pastor to Help Her.

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—The Rev. R. H. F. Gairdner of St. Martin's church, Austin, is to be asked to come to Detroit next week and testify for Mrs. Anna McCarthy, the "Mystery Girl" of Chicago when she has her trial here on a charge of stealing a silver mesh bag while she was in company of the clergyman at the Westwood Inn.

"You are a good girl," Anna declares the rector said to her when the two met by chance in Detroit last July. So her attorney, Thomas Dalton, will ask the Rev. Mr. Gairdner to lend the weight of his testimony at the trial.

Whether the clergyman will consent to appear is a question, as a witness cannot be subpoenaed from another state.

"I will have to give this serious thought," said Dr. Gairdner last night. "As far as the details of the mesh bag incident are concerned, I know nothing about the girl's guilt or innocence. I take it she knows that, and if I am asked to appear it will be as a character witness."

CHILD KILLED BY HORSES.

Walks Backwards Into Street in Front of Team—Driver Not Held.

Minnie Kimlauser, 5 years old, 5045 Shields avenue, was run over and killed last night by a team of horses while in front of her home.

She was playing on the sidewalk with several playmates when she walked backward into the street and ran into the path of the horses.

George Hortz, 5320 South Laflin street, the driver of the team, was not held.

IN CONTEMPT IF HE DOES, IN CONTEMPT IF HE DOESN'T

Sheriff Traeger Cited by Judge Sullivan for Releasing Prisoner at the Order of Another Jurist.

Sheriff John E. Traeger, as mild and courteous a reeve as a county could wish, finds himself in an attitude of involuntary superciliousness towards the respected Circuit court. An order has been issued by Judge Denis Sullivan requiring the sheriff to show cause why he should not be held in contempt of court for releasing David Mooshe from the county jail.

The sheriff did yesterday set free the said David Mooshe, who was doing a turn "in stir" for being behind with his alimony remittances. Mooshe's release was effected through a writ of habeas corpus signed by Judge Dever of the Circuit court.

"If I had refused to release Mooshe on the writ of habeas corpus I would have been in contempt of Judge Dever's court," said the sheriff. "And by releasing him I find I am dangerously near being in contempt of Judge Sullivan's court. It is an odd situation. Of course I am confident that the matter will be adjusted when I have a chance to be heard.

The sheriff thinks something ought to be done to prevent a recurrence of the situation.

ORPETS WILL NOT MOVE.

Cyrus McCormick Joins His Caretaker in Denying Rumor.

A report that the family of E. O. Orpet, father of William Orpet, recently acquitted of the charge of slaying Marion Lambert, was about to remove to California was denied both by Orpet and by Cyrus McCormick yesterday. It was said Orpet was to take charge of the Stanley McCormick estate in California. Cyrus McCormick said he had heard of no desire on the part of his caretaker to resign. The Orpets declined to say where Will Orpet is in seclusion. His mother said she receives a letter from him every two or three days.

PLUTE NEWSIE'S SUIT OPENS

Chicago's Wealthiest Paper Vendor Unable to Land Race Bet Man in Cell.

Chicago's wealthiest newsboy, William Murphy, was checked yesterday in his attempt to land Edward Morris, 33 years old, a saloonkeeper of 44 North Fifth avenue, in a cell for an alleged successful attempt to beat the "newsy" out of $307 won on a horse race. Judge LaBuy continued the trial until Sept. 28.

Murphy charges that he gave Morris $45 to bet on a horse race, and that it won $362 for him; that, nevertheless, Morris refused to give him any money at all. Morris was arrested on a charge of keeping a gambling house.

BABY BEVERLY GIVEN HOME.

Judge Thomson Places Child of Kidnaping Fame in Custody of Its Mother.

Baby Beverly Lorraine Whitgreave, for whose custody her parents are contesting, was ordered given into the temporary custody of the mother, Mrs. Kathryn McCarthy Whitgreave, yesterday by Judge Charles Thomson. It is specified that the child shall be cared for at the home of its maternal grandparent, Timothy McCarthy, 1150 East Forty-seventh street, but the father, Beverly S. Whitgreave, shall have permission to visit it daily at reasonable hours. Neither parent is allowed to take the child from the home of its grandparent.

$3,000 JOBS ARE PASSED UP

There are apparently more persons looking for $1,200 jobs than positions which pay $3,000 and more. More than 170 aspirants for inspectorships in the city food bureau were on hand to take the civil service examination for that place today. It pays from $1,200 to $1,440 annually. Yesterday the commission postponed until Sept. 30 an examination for statistician of the board of education. The salary for this position is $3,000 and up. The reason for the postponement was given as the lack of applications. Only two were filed.

MURPHY'S TITLE TO DR. ANDREWS

Gets Mercy Hospital Post for Which Dr. Besley Was Named.

Dr. E. Wyllys Andrews is the new chief of staff and surgeon in chief of Mercy hospital, succeeding Dr. John B. Murphy. They began all over yesterday, in the hospital tangle, and at the unraveling Dr. Frederic A. Besley, who it was first announced had been given the position, came in as one of the "attending surgeons."

As the matter now stands, Dr. Besley will succeed Dr. Murphy as professor of surgery at the Northwestern university medical school, but not as chief of the hospital staff. Dr. Arthur R. Edwards, dean of the medical school, issued another statement of explanation. It reads:

"Dr. E. Wyllys Andrews has been made chief of staff and surgeon in chief. Dr. William E. Morgan will continue as attending surgeon. Dr. John F. Golden and Dr. Frederic A. Besley have been added to the staff as attending surgeons."

Edwards Changes Statement.

Early on Friday Dr. Edwards made the announcement that Dr. Besley, who has been on the staff of Wesley hospital, would succeed Dr. Murphy both at Mercy hospital and at the Northwestern medical school. Later, when other members of the hospital staff learned of the announcement, Dr. Edwards asked that the announcement be so worded that no one would be credited with taking Dr. Murphy's place at the hospital.

Yesterday Dr. Edwards would not explain the situation which changed the announcement. Some physicians said it was their belief that the regular staff of Mercy hospital objected to the appointment of a new man over the heads of the surgeons who have been at the hospital for many years. The university has a contract which has been renewed at twenty year intervals with the hospital by which the university appoints the staff of surgeons. But, it is said, the appointment of Dr. Besley would have meant the loss of some of the important members of the staff. The final arrangement is thought to be the compromise.

Takes Murphy's Title.

Dr. Andrews stated that the latest announcement of Dr. Edwards seemed to him to be the correct one. The title which he will assume—chief of staff and surgeon in chief—was the title held by Dr. Murphy.

Dr. Golden, according to Dr. Andrews, was associate surgeon while serving in the capacity of Dr. Murphy's assistant. The university now has appointed Dr. Golden an attending surgeon, and he, Dr. Besley, and Dr. Morgan will have identical titles.

MRS. FRANCIS HAS HOPE.

Wife of Ex-Alderman, Now in Bridewell, Says She Can Take Care of Herself.

"I'll take care of myself all right," said Mrs. Joseph F. Francis, wife of the former alderman, to South Clark street station policemen yesterday. After having begged a night's lodging she left, sure that friends of former days would care for her. In the afternoon she paid a brief visit to the bridewell, where her husband is serving a fifteen day sentence for passing a worthless check. She said afterward they had made plans for her to get along, but she refused to tell her plans. Mrs. Francis, however, is still without money, she admitted.

POLICE SHIFT TOMORROW.

Lieutenants, Detectives, and Patrolmen Will Be Affected, Is General Opinion.

Lieutenants, detectives, and patrolmen will be shifted in an order which, it is expected, will be issued by Chief of Police Charles C. Healey tomorrow, it became known in the city hall yesterday. The detective bureau will not be hit, the chief said. He declined to say how many lieutenants and others will be transferred.

LABOR MAN SHOT BY ROY SHIELDS IN BAR CROWD

James Mooney of Painters' Council Victim of New Gunplay by "Muckles."

ATTRIBUTED TO OLD FEUD.

"Muckles" Shields, swinging free of the mahogany rail in Erlewein's labor hangout at 169 West Lake street yesterday, flipped his revolver, and set a bullet tearing into James Mooney, a union agent. As the police came slamming through the doors he stood over his sprawling victim, watching to see if he had enough.

Shields, on the credit side of the police ledger, is a "tough bird." He has never believed in a rusty revolver and he hates to clean it except with blood letting explosions. In the family Bible his name was "Roy," but it isn't at all like him.

Leg Bones Shattered.

Mooney, the bones of his lower left leg shattered, was taken to St. Luke's hospital. He told Capt. Morgan Collins of Central station not to bother about an investigation. He is a trustee of the Painters' council.

"Whoever did it—and I know who it was," said Mooney, as he eased the wound, "will settle with me."

That's the gun code.

Shields formerly was business agent of Painters' Local No. 147. In November, 1913, he was arrested on a charge of having shot William Gradt, 4713 Fullerton avenue, and Charles Cameron, business agent of No. 14, in a crowded meeting of painters. In June, 1914, Shields was shot through the lungs by "Baldy" McLean in the union headquarters. In December, 1914, he was arrested on a charge of dynamiting a house.

Victor Murder Cited.

There has been simmering hatred between Shields and his followers and Mooney and his followers. Some say it was occasioned a year ago when Charles Victor was murdered in a meeting of painters at 20 West Randolph street. Victor wanted pay for his twenty-five weeks of work as an agent. He got lead. Thomas Seepler was tried for the murder, but no one could remember on the witness stand, and he was acquitted.

Yesterday at 4 o'clock Shields and some friends entered Erlewein's place. It is a gathering place of the united-we-stand-divided-we-shoot-gang. Mooney was at the far end of the mahogany rail. Shields viewed Mooney with calm disdain and argued with his friends.

Erlewein was at the cigar counter and, of course, he didn't see anything. Frank Scherk, the bartender, was cracking a hunk of ice for a ginger ale highball.

"Handy Boys" Along Bar.

There was a bunch of the "handy boys" along the bar. George Leonard, 1217 East Forty-fourth place, and Ray Thompson, 6033 Union avenue, didn't see a thing. George Ganey, who was business agent of No. 147 when "Doc" Frank Kerns was on trial in the window smashing conspiracy, and Kerns himself were wondering how one frosts a back bar glass so prettily. Dan Litgo was there, but he obeyed the impulse of the last syllable of his name and he hasn't been seen since.

Mooney moved down the bar until he neared Shields. They passed a word or two. But no one could remember what they were. But Mooney said:

"I'll bet you don't."

And then Shields swung loose of the bar.

"I'll bet you $500 I do," he snarled, and as he spoke he drew. There was a roar and a blinding flash and Mooney went down.

Two Policemen Warned.

In Lake street Policemen Mulcahey and Ryan were just completing negotiations for a basket of peaches each. They took up their baskets and set off for home and a hot dinner with peach cobbler. A frightened citizen rushed up.

"You'd better get into Erlewein's," he gasped. "There's gonna be a gun play in a minute."

He must have been a mind reader. The roar of Shields' revolver punctuated his warning and Lake street was a cloudburst of peaches as Mulcahey and Ryan dropped their purchases and bolted through Erlewein's doors.

Shields was standing over Mooney with his smoking revolver in his hand. A moment later Detective Sergt. Edward Goggin, with a squad of police, burst in. Goggin snatched the revolver from Shields and took him away. But Shields refused to talk.

"Sweated" by Collins.

He was taken to Central station, where he was sweated by Capt. Collins. He talked, and then he repudiated.

"I had to shoot," he said. "If I didn't get him he'd a' got me."

And then he said he didn't know anything about it. And once more he said something about a "red headed man" who fired the shot.

Leonard, Thompson, Ganey, Kerns, and Charles Redmond were held as witnesses. They couldn't remember a thing.

There was widespread gossip over the shooting, which was hard on the heels of the dynamiting of the home of R. J. Shields, a member of the electrical workers' union, at 5621 Indiana avenue. It is believed that labor trouble is at the bottom of the dynamiting, and the police are investigating. R. J. Shields is not related to "Muckles."

POLICE ARREST 'GUNWOMAN'

When Mrs. K. Bass of 4734 South Racine avenue returned home shortly after 8 o'clock last night she got a revolver from the bureau drawer and fired four shots out of the window at several persons who were passing in front of her home. The police are holding her for safekeeping.

SHE'S LOSER IF FATHER'S LIVING

Daughter Who Got Life Insurance Figures in Odd Suit.

Births, deaths, elopements with the butler, and such like family disturbances are household infelicities which the average philosophy discounts readily as part of the short change in life's shell game. But few daughters mourn a parental passenger on Charon's ferry and have him do an Enoch Arden later to find her living happily with the life insurance.

Such a situation probably confronts Mrs. Sophia Gould of Chicago, who, according to the allegations of the Fraternal Mystic Circle of Philadelphia, wore the sable of grief for a father who died, but apparently didn't know it, as he continues to this day to commingle with the living and the lusty in the flesh. The "papa" in question is Isaac Singer of 169 East Fairfield avenue, St. Paul.

A Serviceable Proxy.

If the living Isaac Singer is Mrs. Gould's father he had a serviceable proxy so far as the daughter is concerned in an obliging namesake, who died with sufficient verity to bring the life insurance into Mrs. Gould's reach.

The strange tangle, which in no wise impeaches Mrs. Gould's sincere belief in her father's death, is revealed in the suit brought by the fraternal company in the Ramsey County District court and in disbarment proceedings filed in the Supreme court against Abraham J. Hertz, a St. Paul lawyer, who acted for Mrs. Gould in the collection of the insurance.

In his answer to the suit Mr. Hertz produces proofs in the shape of certified death records that Isaac Singer of Minneapolis died in 1910. He declares that it was this Isaac Singer whose daughter, Mrs. Sophia Gould, employed him to procure the insurance on a policy held by her father.

Admits One Singer Died.

Proof of the existence of two Isaac Singers is so strong that Charles G. Laybourn, attorney for the Fraternal Mystic circle, admits that the Minneapolis Singer died as Hertz asserts in 1910, but he denies this man was the father of Mrs. Sophia Gould.

Mrs. Gould put on mourning for her father when she heard of his death by report last spring, and that she was named beneficiary in the insurance policy. She wept at his passing and employed Mr. Hertz, who by suit secured a settlement of the policy from the reluctant company.

Attorney Hertz declares a number of fraternal companies have banded together to discredit him and other attorneys who make a specialty of handling such cases.

"I will prove that everything is regular and that I am innocent," he asserted.

The living Isaac Singer admits that he knows Hertz and that several years ago, upon the death of Mrs. Singer's mother, he employed him to settle the insurance claims.

CHICAGO GAINS 50,000 IN YEAR DESPITE WAR.

Population Increase, Based on New Directory Estimate, Considered Remarkable.

Despite the halting influences of the war Chicago has gained more than 50,000 in population in the last year, based on the new directory figures. George W. Overton, vice president of the Chicago Directory company, believes the increase to be between 50,000 and 60,000.

"In ordinary times this would be regarded as a normal increase," said Mr. Overton. "But owing to the war in Europe there has been a vast falling off in immigration which always supplies the city with a great percentage of its new population. Therefore, the increase of 50,000 may be regarded as phenomenal in such an off year."

Mr. Overton explained that the lateness in issuing the new directory is due to a shortage of help. Ordinarily the new directory is issued in July or August.

FIGHTING WOMAN FINED $1.

Miss Anna Lawrence, who was alleged to have caused a disturbance on a Bowmanville car as it entered the La Salle street tunnel Friday night, was fined $1 and costs on a charge of disorderly conduct by Judge La Buy yesterday. Arthur J. Devigne, 880 North Central Park avenue, who was arrested with her, was given a similar fine. He denied that he was her companion and she denied it also.

PAISLEY AFFAIRS AND DUBIA'S ALSO TO GRAND JURY

Deposits Received at Brothers' Banks Up to the End, Hoyne Declares.

JUDGE LANDIS IS CAUSTIC.

Information concerning financial methods of the three Paisley north side banks and Harry A. Dubia's Industrial Savings bank will be placed before the Cook county grand jury probably tomorrow or Tuesday, State's Attorney Maclay Hoyne said last night. The prosecutor made this announcement following the receipt of reports from investigators.

"Just at present," Mr. Hoyne said, "I am not in a position to tell what indictments the state's attorney's office will ask of the grand jury, but you can be sure something will be done. The Paisley banks were hopelessly insolvent; the Paisleys must have been aware of that fact; and yet deposits were received right up to the end.

"Our examination showed large loans made by the Paisleys to themselves and an absence of any run. On the last day the records were kept deposits exceeded withdrawals by $2,000. We were unable to find securities and collateral listed in the records."

Dubia Bank Inquiry Opens.

Inquiry into the affairs of the Dubia bank was begun yesterday by the state's attorney, and Mr. Hoyne said that his information was still incomplete. Estimates as to what depositors in the institution will receive in settlement for their claims vary from 60 to 100 per cent. Evidence concerning the condition and financial methods of this institution, Mr. Hoyne said, probably will be ready within a few days.

Affairs of all four banks underwent the scrutiny of Judge Landis again yesterday, and the search for assets, as conducted by the judge and Referee Eastman, is to be resumed this week. Judge Landis emphasized his attitude yesterday to Francis M. Lowes, representing the Paisleys.

"I have to be in St. Louis on Monday," the lawyer protested when the judge announced the inquiry will be resumed tomorrow.

"This is a search for assets, not for lawyers," Judge Landis exploded. "We'll get along very well without you. The witnesses will appear Monday."

The double pursuit of assets in the two separate cases sharpened the judge's wits and his tongue as well. He was particularly bitter during the Paisley inquiry.

Judge Tears Off Masks.

"Before this case goes any farther," he announced at one stage in the proceedings, "I want to say that the pharasaical and hypocritical attitude toward the deluded depositors must not go on. We all know that these banks cannot pay out dollar for dollar, but it appears that a persistent effort has been made and is being made to make the depositors believe the banks could have survived if let alone."

"Just like two men swapping undershirts," was the judge's description of a "wash" transaction between the Dubia bank and Congressman A. J. Sabath. The bank holds the congressman's note for $20,000 and the congressman has the bank's certificate of deposit for a like amount. The "undershirt deal" concerned the congressman's Chicago Bonding company.

"Can you pay that note?" Judge Landis asked the congressman.

"I can, if I have to, in five or ten days," was the reply. "But, your honor, I have a certificate of deposit for that amount. I simply exchanged the note for the certificate, and we agreed that neither was to call on the other. If I pay, do I give the certificate of deposit?"

"Just like two men swapping undershirts," was the judge's comment. "I thought I was going to collect $20,000, but I guess I won't."

The judge announced his desire "to congratulate the congressman on his ability to arrange $20,000 in apparent assets."

That $20,000 Lease.

Judge Landis met with another disappointment when he tried to find somebody who would pay $20,000 for the ninety-nine year leasehold which the Paisleys schedule among their assets at $30,000. Oliver Frank Paisley, one of the brothers, told the judge that Jerome W. Robbins had made an offer of $20,000 for the lease. Like Congressman Sabath, Robbins was summoned into court on a forthwith subpœna.

"Grab him quick!" ordered the judge. "If he has $20,000 in his clothes I'll sell this lease to him before noon."

Mr. Robbins was duly "grabbed," but it turned out that "somebody else," S. H. Newman by name, had made the offer. Mr. Newman immediately was in demand.

"Bring him in here Monday and don't let him get away!" Judge Landis exclaimed. "Bind him, gag him, or manacle him, but get him here. I want that $20,000."

Newman Wouldn't Touch It.

The $20,000 valuation and the $20,000 "offer" melted away last night when The Tribune questioned Mr. Newman concerning the leasehold.

"I wouldn't touch it," the man said emphatically. "The lease is for ninety-nine years all right, but it contains a ten year revaluation clause. About a year ago, I said I might consider the lease for $20,000 if the revaluation clause was eliminated. I wouldn't take a chance on it with the revaluation clause at that time, and now I wouldn't go near it. Somebody may have some special use for the property, but I don't think there's a market for it."

Mr. Robbins maintains the lease was worth [illegible] a year ago and about [illegible]-

000 new. The lease was signed Feb. 8, 1915, and began running on the May 8 following. For the first ten years the rental is $3,000 annually.

THE DUBIA HEARING

"Ah, that sounds more like a private bank," was Judge Landis' exclamation, when informed by Michael Gesas that $200,000 or $359,406 of the bills receivable in the Industrial Savings bank represents funds loaned Harry A. Dubia or his concerns. Mr. Gesas is attorney for the Central Trust company, made receiver of the Industrial by Judge Landis.

According to the report presented by Mr. Gesas, the face value of the assets of the Dubia bank exceed $1,182,000, but he estimated the actual value as between $400,000 and $500,000.

The liabilities of the bank amount to $643,000.

"Dubia assures me, however, that the two companies he owns, the Chicago Dry Kiln company and the American Compound Door company will pay out his indebtedness dollar for dollar," said Attorney Gesas.

Accounts Receiveable.

"What do the accounts receivable in the bank amount to?" asked the judge.

"They amount to $359,406, of which amount $200,000 was loaned by the bankrupt to himself or his concerns."

"Ah, that sounds more like a private bank."

Dubia was questioned slightly on the start of his bank.

"How much capital in your bank?"

"Fifty thousand dollars."

"Did you put in all that money?"

"I put in $37,500."

"Actual cash?"

"Yes, sir."

"What are the liabilities now?"

"Eight hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. Dubia Explains.

Dubia appeared in response to the telephone summons.

"Mr. Sabath," he testified, "came to me and asked me to give him a certificate of deposit for $20,000, and when I asked him what I would get for it he said, 'My note.'"

"Did you give him the certificate of deposit?" asked Judge Landis.

"Yes, sir. He agreed not to use the certificate, and I agreed not to use the note."

"It was just like a couple of men trading undershirts. I can't collect the $20,000," continued the banker.

"I guess that's it."

The Bonding Company.

Judge Landis and Attorney Gesas then asked Mr. Dubia with reference to the Chicago Bonding company.

"There was a statement found in the bank in which the bonding company agrees not to use any notes which they hold. Why was that?"

"We were simply acting as collectors for the bonding company."

"Now, Mr. Dubia, are you interested in some company in which the word 'kiln' is in?"

"The Chicago Dry Kiln company."

"Will you turn over the stock in that company to the receiver?"

"Yes, sir."

Mr. Sabath's Story.

Congressman Sabath appeared in response to the forthwith subpœna.

"Did you sign a note for $20,000 made payable to Dubia?" Judge Landis asked.

"I did."

"Can you pay that note?"

"I can, if I am obliged to, in five or ten days. But, your honor, I have a certificate of deposit for that amount. I simply exchanged the note for the certificate, and we agreed that neither was to use the paper."

"Then it really was like a couple of men trading undershirts," commented Judge Landis. "I thought I was going to collect $20,000, but I guess I won't."

Congressman Sabath later explained that he would exchange his certificate of deposit for the note for $20,000 should the receiver request it.

"I suppose the receiver will later request the certificate and surrender the note to me," he said. "I will do whatever the authorities decide is right in the matter."

Neither Sabath nor Dubia would explain why the swap was made. Judge Landis did not ask them.

SABATH EXPLAINS

But He Leaves Mystery of Why He Negotiated $20,000 "Offset" Loan.

After Judge Landis' court adjourned yesterday a Tribune representative asked Congressman A. J. Sabath to amplify his testimony.

"Any note that I owe the Dubia bank will be paid by me in full if the receiver finds that I am indebted to the concern in any way," he said. "I naturally will be forced to await developments in regard to any moneys due me from the bank, and there are some due my family and me.

"However, I have done business with Mr. Dubia for over twenty years, and have the utmost confidence that we will all be paid in full. In regard to the $20,000 transaction, I can only say that it was a perfectly legitimate deal, which is practiced by all state banks. My credit is good for that amount, and I only wish that this was all I owed. If that was the case I should be a happy man.

"If I am forced to meet the $20,000 demand note I will do so, and will take my medicine with the rest of the depositors, as I will then be a creditor on that transaction for $20,000, and will be forced to accept dividends like all other creditors."

Asked for an explanation as to just why he negotiated the "offset" deal of $20,000, Mr. Sabath said he did not think it was necessary to give any.

THE PAISLEY BANKS

William W. Paisley was the first witness in the federal inquiry into the failure of the W. H. Paisley & Sons private banks.

"Who is the company in this firm of Paisley & Co.?" demanded Judge Landis.

"I am the Paisley and also the company. I am the only member," was the answer.

Q.—Does the Summerdale or the North Shore bank hold any of your paper? A.—Yes, sir, the North Shore bank holds my note for $2,000.

Q.—Do they hold any security? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Who loaned it to you? A.—Oliver F. Paisley.

"I Don't Know."

Q.—How did you come to borrow this money? A.—I don't know.

Q.—Don't you know what happened when you got the money? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Maybe you can tell me what your income is if you cannot remember about the money? A.—My income exceeds $10,000.

Q.—Are you on this note of $12,000 that was mentioned yesterday? A.—No, sir, one of my brothers signed that.

Q.—Do you claim any interest in the leasehold they spoke of yesterday? A.—Yes, sir. A third. It is worth $40,000.

Q—Did you ever have a buyer for it? A.—Yes, sir, we were offered $20,000 for it last year

That "Pharisaical" Attitude.

The judge then ordered Oliver F. Paisley, one of the owners of the private banks, to call up the purchaser whose name is said to be Roderick and tell him to appear in court immediately.

"Before the case goes any farther," said the judge, "I want to say that the pharisaical and hypocritical attitude toward the deluded depositors must not go on. We all know that this bank cannot pay out dollar for dollar, but it appears that a persistent effort has been made and is being made to make the depositors think that the bank would have survived if let alone."

Correcting His Testimony.

William Paisley, the father, was then called to the stand, but when he stated that he had no interest in the bank he was excused and Oliver F. was called.

"Didn't you tell me yesterday that your father, your brother, and yourself formed the firm of William H. Paisley & Sons?"

"No, sir. My father used to be a partner, but he dropped out."

"Did you pay him anything for his quarter interest?"

"No, sir."

"Mr. Paisley Sr., step up here. Are you ever going to press a claim for your interest in the firm?"

"No, sir."

Jarrell on the Grill.

J. T. Jarrell, attorney for the Paisleys, was asked by Judge Landis what his connection with the bank was.

"I have been employed by the bank for some time."

"You have been through bankruptcy yourself?"

"Yes, sir."

"And the Paisleys were one of your creditors?"

"Yes, sir."

"Now, what about this leasehold? What is that worth?"

"$20,000."

How About It, Trustees?

"Who was it leased from?"

"The board of education, and I think they are putting something over on the Paisleys."

"Then it isn't an asset. I thought Mr. Oliver F. told me that it was worth $3,000 a year. Isn't that right?" the judge asked.

"You misunderstood me, your honor," said O. F. Paisley. "I said the rental was $3,000 a year."

"What assets have you with which to pay the $5,000 note which you owe to the Paisleys?" the judge shot at Jarrell.

"I have my law practice and personal property worth $200."

An Honorable Man.

"Mr. Paisley, you swore that the Jarrell note was worth its face value. Where do you expect him to get the money?"

"I believe he is an honorable man," answered Paisley, "and if it is within my power to make him pay I will do so."

At this point Jerome W. Robbins, a real estate dealer, entered the courtroom and in answer to a question by Judge Landis said he had a client who had offered $20,000 for the leasehold in question.

"Who is he?" demanded the court.

"Bring him in here Monday and don't let him get away. Bind, gag, or manacle him, but get him here. I want that $20,000."

The case was then continued until Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

Found Dead from Gas.

Anthony Ederl, a bricklayer, who has a wife and children at 829 Seminary street, Dubuque, Ia., was found dead from gas in a rooming house at 25 Harlem avenue, Forest Park, yesterday.

GERMAN TROOPS CALM AT TASKS DESPITE DANGER

Pursue Work of Peace in Midst of Hail of Steel from Allies Along the Somme.

Herewith is presented a letter by James O'Donnell Bennett on the British offensive along the Somme. Another will be printed tomorrow.

Article 1.—Contrasts.

WITH THE GERMANS ON THE ROMAN ROAD NEAR BAPAUME, Aug. 8.—I give it up! After two years with the Germans I don't know whether they have nerves or steel or lack a sense of the ridiculous. For right in the midst of this gigantic offensive they are filling teeth, fitting glasses, building wagons, building houses, making butter, cheese, and sugar, breeding ducks, tying up roses, thinning out the tomato plants, and eating caviar.

These are side issues in days of fighting and nights of trench digging.

I have tried to picture the awful destruction which the Anglo-French offensive has wrought in this great triangle formed by the Ancre and the Somme. From Gommecourt on the north to Peronne on the south, a distance of eighteen miles as the crow flies, there is not a rod of it that any reputable insurance company would pronounce safe for either life or property.

Destruction at Any Time.

It is a region of swirl, whistle, hammer, and pound, of grilling heat and of fields potholed by shells.

At 9 in the morning you orientate yourself by a church tower, and at 10:30, when you pass that way again, the church tower may be gone. You drop in to chat at a regimental headquarters where you haven't been for twenty-four hours, and you find thirty-six square yards of the roof blown away. A question brings the laconic reply, "Happened yesterday afternoon. A trumpeter dead and two wounded. We seem to be under constant observation of the British without the aid of aeroplanes."

This morning I edged my distrustful way through the village of ——. It was burning from the bombardment of the night before, but had not been under fire for several hours. Fifteen minutes after I had got through the village the British began dropping shells on the other side of it, and I had the sobering sensation of being cut off from flight despite a pair of legs that showed the best will in the world to bear me away.

The French, whose lines join the British at Hardecourt, a few leagues opposite B——, were rendered emulous by the British activity, and they, too, reopened their fire on the place.

Sky Filled with Noise.

With a vehement German response the sky became a swirl of pertinacious and unpleasant sounds, which, however, registered themselves on my attentive if confused mind not as sounds but as scrawling circles, indeterminate, jumbled, and interlaced.

A far seeing sentry posted at the crossroads at R—— devoted many minutes to scooping himself a shelter that bore an uncanny resemblance to a grave but provided ample refuge for the emergency his intellect apprehended. Within fifteen minutes after he had finished his retreat and installed himself in it a shell exploded ten feet from him. Lacking his grave, he undoubtedly would have been killed.

A German soldier will fight to the last, but he also will leave no reasonable precautions out of his calculations.

Don't Mind Big Guns.

Shocking as is the destruction and ever present as is the peril along this Gommecourt-Bapaume-Peronne line of operations, the region also contains little nooks that are hives of ceaseless industry and scenes of delightful social interchange. Every one of these places lies within range of the big guns of the allied armies, and many of them have been under fire within the last few days. Some are at this instant.

That is why, after two years, the Germans still baffle me.

Here, in the crash and rattle of the most tremendous offensive they yet have faced, they display a persistency in making themselves comfortable that amounts to a passion and a capacity for going on with the routine of life that seems almost indecent.

Panting with excitement, my mouth dry and my nerves tingling, I scurried away from the village of L—— at sunset after having seen a heavy shell apparently tear the heart out of it, and got back to a sequestered place sheltered by heavy woods.

Soldiers Read Home Papers.

This place also was within range, but not at the moment under fire. A considerable body of troops was scattered through it and the men were taking their ease by the roadside or under the rustic porches they had built in front of the peasants' cottages in which they were quartered.

The post had just come in and was being distributed. Soldiers sitting in shirtsleeves and with elbows on knees were poring over the home papers, as oblivious of the bombardment which was ripping the neighboring village to pieces as if they were back in the fatherland.

This morning I passed through a strip of country that lies in the zone of fire and all the way it was almost as common a sight to see little squads of soldiers going out into the fields with scythes as it was to see columns marching forward. At other points, also within range, one crop was hardly in before the plowing began for another.

At still another I saw a German forking manure in a field lying behind a bit of wood, into which the English were hurling shells. One came over the wood and fell so near both of us that it made that crackling sound in the ears which usually prompts a man to reconsider his route.

The soldier went on forking manure.

Build New Field Railways.

Throughout this region of hammer and pound, which, when the artillery is active, is like an open air foundry, the Germans are not only still building new field railways [that carry ammunition and food] but are perfecting the old ones. Some, instead of being edged around a rise of ground or built over a slope, are carried through cuts dug at an enormous expenditure of labor and under distracting conditions.

At B. six soldiers were sitting in the consultation room of an army optician waiting to be fitted with glasses. These were not cases of eye trouble. They received the same attention that they would have received in civil life and that attention was given as a matter of course. A combination dark room and operating room opened off the consultation room.

The town was under fire yesterday. Half a block down the street three German dentists were at work. The three men in the chairs were soldiers. The chairs were made of birch, cut from the neighboring wood and the backs could be raised and lowered.

Dentists Treat French, Too.

When the chief dentist was asked how many soldiers he had treated in the seven months and some days of 1916 he flipped open a big ledger and replied, "Four thousand one hundred and thirty-eight." Not all the patients are soldiers. Many a French villager has received free treatment.

One of the patients was the Marquis d'Avocourt, a man of 75 years, who was in great distress as a result of breaking his plate. The Germans repaired it and he, too, went his way rejoicing.

But the quaintest activity I have seen in the zone of fire was in Gomiecourt, a small place not to be confused with Gommecourt, which is the most westerly point on the German front in the Somme region. Gomiecourt lies six miles to the east.

In the garden of a villa there two soldiers were tying up rose bushes. When I drifted in a young rittmeister who seemed to be in command showed me over the place, pointing with special pride to his duck pond, which was populous and clamorous. The more I admired the more eager he became to show off the property. Meanwhile the whole countryside to the west was shaking under the heavy guns of both armies.

OBITUARY.

JOSEPH A. WHITE—Funeral services for Joseph A. White, who died Sept. 19 at Deposit, N. Y., where he was visiting at the home of a daughter, will be held from the White home, 458 Belmont avenue, today. Mr. White was 62 years old. He was long an active worker in Thirteenth ward politics, and for nine years he held official positions in several Cook county courts. For the last two years of his life he was receiving clerk in the Chicago Athletic club.

AUGUST KRETCHMAR, 47 years old, 4856 Magnolia avenue, for a number of years watchman for Von Lengerke & Antoine, 130 South Wabash avenue, died last night, following a short illness. Mr. Kretchmar, after reaching his place of employment Friday night, was stricken with severe pains. He was removed to St. Luke's hospital, where he died. Heart disease is said to have been the cause.

CHRESTOS P. DAMASCUS—Funeral services for Chrestos P. Damascus, 85 years old, editor of the Greek newspaper Saloniki, who died Friday after a long illness at the Augustana hospital, will be held Tuesday, at 11 o'clock, at the Holy Trinity church, 1101 South Peoria street. He was a brother-in-law of Dr. N. Salopoulos, general consul for Greece in Chicago.

COUPLE SO VERY HAPPY JUDGE FACES PUZZLE.

Living Together Illegally, but Court Hesitates to Sentence Them, and Husband Shows Indifference.

"They apparently are so happy I don't know what to do," said Judge Harry M. Fisher in the Morals court yesterday while hearing the cases of Mrs. Mary Zykka and Stanley Preszka, who have lived together for three years at 1502 West Ohio street. They have one child.

Mrs. Zykka's husband, Jacob, whom she deserted three years ago after a married life of seventeen years, was in court but evinced little interest in the proceedings. They have three children.

"I would rather go to jail for a year than leave him," cried Mrs. Zykka. "We have been so happy!"

The woman's husband asserted it was immaterial to him whether she returned or continued living with Preszka.

"These persons are so happy, although they are living together illegally, that I am in a quandary what to do," said the judge. "I suggest that you take steps to get a divorce, Mrs. Zykka, and then marry this man."

Zykka nodded a careless assent to this solution. The "other man" said he would marry her if she got a divorce, and the judge continued the case.

CLEARS UP CYCLE MYSTERY.

Motorist Tells of Finding Injured Driver in Park and Giving Him Aid.

The mystery of the riderless motorcycle found in Lincoln park late Thursday night was cleared yesterday when Ira D. Perry of 1829 Chase avenue, whose automobile was thought to have collided with the motorcycle and injured its rider, called at the Sheffield avenue station.

He explained that he nearly ran over a prostrate form lying in the driveway. He got out of his car, he said, and found Frank Nordle of 1415 Union avenue suffering from a broken rib and cuts. He took him to St. Luke's hospital.

"He told me," said Perry, "that the tail light of his motorcycle went out and while he was repairing it a limousine car struck him."

HEAVY BREATHING IS RIGHT.

Householder with Hatchet Waits for Negro Burglar to Pop Head Out of Trunk.

If John Anderson, a carpenter, living at 1307 West Sixty-first street, had been left alone a while longer he might have satisfied his eagerness to whack William Buckner on the head with a hatchet.

Anderson came home to hear a noise in his flat. He finally located it in a trunk. He heard heavy breathing, but the occupant wouldn't talk. Finally the lid of the trunk was raised and Buckner, a Negro, popped his head out to get fresh air. Then he shut the lid again.

Anderson got a hatchet and waited. But he made so much noise that the neighbors called the police and Buckner was dragged out and arrested. He was accused of attempted burglary.

Search for Truck Driver.

The police are searching for the driver of a light auto truck which fatally injured Israel Oris, 3 years old, 1404 Hastings street, while he was playing near his home.

NICHOLS—In memory of our beloved husband and father, Michael Nichols, and brother, John T. Nichols, who died one year ago. High mass at St. Thomas Aquinas church Monday, Sept. 25, at 7:30 a. m.

We saw you linger day by day,
We watched you slowly pass away.
If love and care could death prevent
Your days would not so soon be spent.
But, father dear, as God knows best,
He took you home with him to rest.

FROM LOVING WIFE AND CHILDREN.

Peaceful be thy sleep, dear brother.
It is sweet to breathe thy name.
In life we loved you dearly,
In death we do the same.

The ALL-YEAR Car—Detachable Coupe Top mounted on HUNDRED POINT SIX Four-Passenger Gibraltar Roadster Body and same car with Top detached. Price complete, $1520.

"WHAT a corking Coupe!"—"Isn't that Sedan a beauty?"—"What a stunning Town Car!" And so it went all day yesterday. Never have Chicagoans seen coach building brought to such a high development.

The ALL-YEAR Car, Kissel's original "two-in-one" idea that changed the motoring habits of a nation, gives you a wide open, roofless touring car in the summer and a luxuriously upholstered closed coach in the winter. No overlapping top—no rattling or unsightly fastenings here. ALL-YEAR Tops are built in—not on.

Come! We want you to compare these models with the other so-called convertible types. You will appreciate Kissel supremacy once you see these new models.

THE PARAMOUNT ISSUES.

The two chief issues of the campaign are, first, whether national defense, commercial and military, shall be consigned to the hands of a party by principle and tradition devoted to a strong nationalism and the doctrine of protection or to a party jealous of national power and opposed to protective tariffs; and, second, whether the precedent set by the so-called settlement of the railway controversy shall be accepted or repudiated.

This second issue is, in our opinion, the most important question now before the American people, since if the course of action followed in the railroad crisis is not understood by the public but is approved because of political sophistry or a short sighted and misapplied idealism, then the integrity of the American political system will be gravely affected and a period of political, social, and economic demoralization will be ushered in.

Democracy cannot live if organized minorities can force it to unconsidered acts. Our peace, the operation of our institutions, our progress, political, social, and economic, depend upon the orderly rule of the majority. We know that in Mexico and in other Latin American countries, miscalled republics, the rule of faction, the domination of organized minorities, makes a mock of liberty and blocks the pathway of democratic progress. It would not be otherwise with us if the precedent set in the railroad settlement is followed.

The settlement was described succinctly by Mr. Hughes at Springfield. "Within a few hours, at the demand of the administration, congress provided a mandatory increase of wages, involving millions of dollars, without an idea whether the increase was or was not justified. And this action was taken in connection with the essential instrumentality of commerce, the arteries of our commercial life."

It should be realized by the American people that as Mr. Hughes said, "the issue thus presented is fundamental." In Mexico or Nicaragua or Peru a faction with a few machine guns seizes the machinery of government and rules the majority. We call this tyranny. We see at once that it is not republicanism. But what difference in principle is there between that process and the coercion of congress by means of the threat of a paralysis of transportation to the enactment of a wage law without inquiry or consideration of its justice or expediency?

"The processes of reason," said Mr. Hughes, "are the only alternative to tyranny," and "we can stand mistakes in policies if we are sound in method, but we cannot yield reason to force. That is the path of sure disaster. I should not take the first step in that path."

We do not believe that the American public can be deceived by explanations that do not explain or excuses that do not excuse, into approving this step, taken for the first time in the nation's history. "What is fair and right must be done, but what is fair and right must first be ascertained." That is the common sense of the American system, and we do not believe the American people are going to depart from it.

The issue raised by the passage of the eight hour pay act without investigation and under duress of a national calamity strikes straight at the heart of the American system. It should be met with clear eyes at once. Peace, social justice, and orderly progress depend upon our decision.

SUCCESS, AMERICAN STYLE.

Mr. Channing Pollock, the playwright, contributes to a theatrical magazine, the Green Book, an essay on "The Great God Success," which is suggestive comment not only on the American theater but on certain familiar qualities of American life.

Mr. Pollock contends that success is the greatest obstacle in the path of success, and to prove his doctrine gives instances of men who have failed because they succeeded. "If at first you do not fail," declares Mr. Pollock, "you never try again."

The instances are suggestive. A young man, poor and obscure, toils in a hall bedroom. He concentrates on his work, for he is consumed with youth's desire to succeed. For his passionate effort he wins the reward which the American public is always ready to bestow upon work which has the freshness and élan of youth.

This reward takes the form not of the praise of the select few but of the applause and especially the dollars of the many.

"But," says Mr. Pollock, "for some reason the need of the author in this country seems to be for material rather than for mental achievement." The shower of gold is fatal seduction. The young victor buys a house, a car, a yacht. His impulse to do greatly relaxes. He gives himself up to being great, and presently he has faded into a more or less luxurious but inglorious obscurity, and his place is taken by other young aspirants who in their turn rise and drop away.

The result is that our theater has few veterans, few men whose talent it can depend upon to develop maturely and to rely upon for many years. This, it seems, is in the main true, and it offers an interesting if not unfamiliar commentary upon American social character today. The success whose limitations Mr. Pollock feels is, after all, the success which the American really values, a quantitative triumph of praise, a success measured in dollars and expressed by what Veblen named "conspicuous waste," that is, excessive expenditure to advertise one's possession of power and material distinction from the crowd.

The truly great man, the man of singular mental power and imagination, is not seduced by this kind of success. He does not curl up on a scented cushion and go to sleep, because he has within his mind something more exciting than the bourgeois pleasures of a country house or a limousine. He gets his sense of existence and his joy of life from the exercise of his imagination or his reasoning faculty. Bernard Shaw is well to do and famous, but his ideas are more exciting than an evening in a New York restaurant could be to him.

All this is obvious. But why is it that we develop playwrights who define success in materialistic terms and die early of a surfeit of animal luxury and almost none who finds in the practice of his art and in the exercise of creative imagination more happiness than he can get from the banalities of money? And why is it that callow youth can win from the American theatrical public such enormous success that it is crushed by it?

The latter question seems easier to answer than the former, but the answer to one is surely bound up with the answer to the other. We may say that America is herself a callow youth seduced by a premature and easy success and that it seeks on the stage, as elsewhere, only the sort of animal content and pleasure which youth's engaging, effervescent comment on life can provide. But that is too easy and sweeping a generality. When we have come thus far in our theorizing we have not ended but only begun.

WHAT HAPPENED ON THE BORDER.

In today's TRIBUNE begins a series of articles by Mr. Floyd Gibbons, war correspondent of THE TRIBUNE, who has been studying the conditions of our troops along the border.

It is the first wholly uncensored and comprehensive report of the facts, and if the American people will study it they will come to some important conclusions and call for some greatly needed measures of reform.

The situation disclosed by Mr. Gibbons does not square with the optimism of official report. It is the cold truth, and it shows very clearly that our system is in need of drastic amendment. This amendment will not come if we shirk unpleasant facts and conclusions, which, however sound, cast a sorry light upon our governmental processes and the state of public defense. It is the duty of citizenship to face these facts, however, and to act upon them. The men who answered the president's call and, most of them, at a personal sacrifice assumed the military burden which belongs to all American men, have done their duty. They have done it and at this time are doing it, patiently, faithfully, and with a will. But their effort has been largely wasted and will be wholly wasted unless we who have not served will do the duty which lies before us. It is our duty to understand what is going on and see to it that its mistakes are rectified. We owe it to the men who have taken up arms for us, we owe it to ourselves and to our posterity to make an end of the system whose weakness we have had demonstrated for us.

We have not an army. We have not a system which even with the most devoted effort can produce an army.

The American public for two years now has been reading of the miracles of patriotic devotion and of military efficiency in Europe.

Let them read now of the wasted patriotic devotion of our own countrymen and the inefficiency of the defenses we have been depending upon to protect us from aggression.

WHAT OUR MAGAZINES WANT.

The young missionary who called at the library and asked for a short sketch of Buddhism—"just enough to enable me to refute the idea when I am in India"—is recalled in reading the August Bulletin of the Authors' League of America, in which a magazine advertises for short stories "with the H. C. Bunner touch." The Bunner "touch" was buried, we fear, when that talented writer died, but the magazine might ask for short stories with the Robert Louis Stevenson, or the Rudyard Kipling, or the O. Henry "touch." These touches, rubber stamped, may still be had at any hardware store

Further information as to the needs of our magazine editors is found under the heading "The Magazine Market." Here we learn on what our public feeds that it hath grown so stupid. The tired business man and his tired wife can find "bright, breezy tales, full of action," "mystery and adventure," "short, snappy, unusual stuff," "love stories with copious dialogue," "lively stories of novel plot," "clean sex stories," "stories with strong heart interest," "melodramatic stories with a sex note. However, nothing overdone or vulgar. All fiction must be free from anything unpleasant." "Stories with strong sex interest. No objection to an unhappy ending." "Sex stories," "lover interest, child interest, homely type," "with a society or psychological turn," "stories with a strong sex interest, or any unusual story, pleasant or unpleasant." Each of these characterizations is taken from the published requirements of a different magazine. It will be noticed that the editors have no objection to sex stories. Almost invariably they say, "No poetry." One magazine, The Housewife, edited by a man, curtly says, "Overstocked with literary material," thus indicating why so many husbands come home to find dinner not ready. A single magazine, the Century, says it looks for just two things—"literary distinction and human interest." Literary distinction in a magazine story! Who ever heard of it?

Editorial of the Day

SOME CANADIAN ADVICE.

[From the Winnipeg Telegram.]

Efforts in the United States to expand the regular army are not meeting with any great success. The necessary laws have been enacted by congress, but the men do not come forward. A soldier's life under normal conditions has little attraction for the average American, nor, for that matter, does it appeal much to the citizen of any democratic community.

Neither is the experiment of calling upon the state militia for service along the Mexican border answering fully to expectations. The young fellows without dependents like it well enough for a while, as an experience and an adventure, but the men who have to leave their families or to sacrifice positions in the business world regard it as an imposition. They do not see why this burden should be placed upon them when other citizens are exempt.

At the same time it is noticeable that when a real war is in sight the American is ready enough. More of them are in the Canadian army than have volunteered to serve their own country since their troops were ordered to the southern frontier. There would be many thousands more of them enlisted here were it not for the operation of the neutrality laws.

The truth is that a democracy, and especially a well fed democracy, will not consent to waste time in the half idle and almost wholly vacuous life that is a soldier's lot in peace time. A comparatively few can be found to do it, but the endeavor to keep a standing army of any size does not appeal to the people.

The United States must follow the British plan of establishing a large navy which will insure safety from invasion and give time for getting together an army when the need arises. All they require on land is a nucleus for training purposes and for extraordinary police work on occasion.

ONE DEFINITION.

"What do they mean by reverting to type?"
"Lugging a controversy into the newspapers."
—Philadelphia Bulletin.

LA MARQUISE DE FONTENOY

[Copyright: 1916: By the Brentwood Company.]

REGINALD WALTER whose marriage to Miss Winifred Allsopp, only daughter of the widowed Lady Mildred Allsopp, has just taken place in London, is an officer of the First Life guards, has been serving at the front as such since the beginning of the war, and is the only brother of John Walter, the fifth of that name in the London Times dynasty, and representing the fifth generation of the members of his house who have been connected with the newspaper.

Although the Walters no longer own the controlling interest of the Times, it having passed into the hands of Lord Northcliffe, yet they still possess large holdings of the stock, as well as most of the printing business of the paper.

The present John Walter is chairman of the Times Liability company, was until the death of his father, Arthur Fraser Walter, the Times correspondent at Madrid, after having previously served his apprenticeship as assistant of the late De Blowitz and Lavino at Paris and having acted as assistant at Berlin and at Vienna. He also owns the estate of Bearwood, near Wokingham, which for a hundred years has been the Walter home in Berkshire and where his soldier brother was born.

Some few years ago Bearwood was put up for sale by auction by the London real estate dealers, Trollope & Co. But the sale fell through, and it is still occupied by John Walter, greatly to the satisfaction of all employés of the Times. Almost every one of the many hundreds of printers, mechanics, etc, in fact, all the noneditorial employés, have been born on the Bearwood estate, as have their fathers and grandfathers before them.

Every brick in the present Times building in Printing House square was made at Bearwood, and every timber and board was grown on the estate. Nor is it possible to find any newspaper in the world that has been more wholly identified with the home of the family of its owner than the London Times.

It was John Walter, second of the dynasty, to whom Bearwood owes its existence. Traveling thirty-four miles to and from London by stage coach twice a week, John Walter II. made his principal home at Bearwood and converted it into a princely domain, half park, half farm.

He built a mansion of moderate size, but as time went on numerous additions were made, and between 1860 and 1870 it was decided that the old roof tree had outlived its purpose, and it gave place to the present stately Tudor mansion in a beautiful park of 500 acres. At the gates is the model village of Sindlesham, which forms part of the Bearwood estates and where most of the Times typesetters, proofreaders, and mechanics live, with their parents and children.

There is a beautiful lake on the Bearwood estate, and it was there that the fourth John Walter was drowned, on Christmas eve, 1870, in his twenty-fifth year, by falling through the ice while skating. His next brother, the late Arthur Walter, then became heir to Bearwood and to the Times property in his stead. And it is his son in turn, John Walter the fifth, who is now owner of the estate

One of the most remarkable things about the Walters is the persistency with which they have declined the offers of honors from the crown and government. Four offers of peerages have been made, but invariably refused, the Walters holding that the acceptance of any title would add no dignity or prestige to their name, but would impair their independence.

At the close of the peninsular war and on the restoration of King Ferdinand he sent a table service of solid gold to John Walter II. as an acknowledgment of the service rendered to the cause of Spain by the Times. But the gift was promptly returned to Madrid.

Perhaps one of the most kindly things was the generous and thoughtful consideration which the Walters showed at the time of the death of the special correspondent of the times, M. Bowlby, during the Taeping rebellion in China. Bowlby was slowly tortured to death by the Chinese. The story of his horrible fate was printed in the Times. But after the regular edition was printed the presses were stopped and a single copy of another edition containing a mild account of the case was struck off and mailed to Bowlby's aged mother, so that she might never know the cruel sufferings that her son had endured before he died.

It may be of interest to recall that John Walter I. was put in the public pillory at Charing Cross and subjected to the horrors of Newgate prison for telling the truth about George III.'s reprobate son, the Prince of Wales (afterward George IV.), and his brothers, the Dukes of York and Cumberland. That the citizens of London did not consider it a disgrace was shown by the fact that the lord mayor of London and the sheriffs in their robes came and sat beside him while he was in the pillory.

Over the main door of the Times office there is a marble slab on which is carved the story of how the paper in 1840, at an enormous risk and expense, exposed a gigantic fraud and saved millions of pounds sterling to the merchants of London. The cost of this work was so great that a large fund was subscribed to reimburse the Times.

John Walter II. insisted that the money should be used to found scholarships connected with Oxford and Cambridge and Christ's hospital. It was then that the grateful commercial community placed on marble its tribute of gratitude.

Reginald Walter's bride, Mildred Allsopp, belongs to one of the great brewing dynasties of England. The chief of the family is Lord Hindlip, a familiar figure in the United States and Canada. He has achieved note as an Asiatic and African explorer, much of what we know of the Somali regions of the dark continent and of the remote portions of Abysinia and of the White Nile country being due to him and to his American companion in most of these expeditions, the son of William Fitzroy Whitehouse of New York and Newport.

CONSUMPTION AND DIABETES

THE battle against consumption has been on for something like twenty years. During the first ten years the campaign was one of preparation through education and stimulation of interest. During the second ten years the campaign has become in greater measure one of hospital, sanitarium, and dispensary care.

The death rate from this disease has been reduced somewhere about 25 per cent. In those places where the battle has been longer in existence or where it has been more vigorously prosecuted the death rate has been reduced from 40 to 50 per cent. The outlook is that when the children now in the public schools become responsible for the laws, the customs, and the habits of the people the death rate will fall to less than half its present level.

So great a saving of life is no small matter, but of even greater good has been the influence of the campaign on tuberculosis on certain customs. Sleeping porches were as rare as birds' teeth a generation ago. Now most houses, except those for the very poor, have sleeping porches, and the very poor are being allowed to sleep in the parks in summer. Perhaps in another generation the very poor may have houses in which they can somehow sleep out. A badly ventilated amusement resort cannot be made to pay. The number of open air schools in ten years has grown from none to about a thousand. Factories are being ventilated. Sunshine and fresh air are everywhere at a premium.

And now we learn of a camapign of education about and treatment for diabetes. It is the claim that by this treatment diabetes can be cured. Joslin says: "It is encouraging to be able to report that during this last year the mortality of my patients was approximately 20 per cent lower than for the previous year. So-called acutely fatal diabetes is disappearing under modern methods."

A few days ago a woman wrote me that she had heard of the new treatment of diabetes and she wanted to know, first, whether what she had heard was true. She had heard that if a diabetic would go without food for thirty days he would be cured and that after that he could eat whatever he wanted and in whatever quantity. What she heard was not true. In the first place, the period of fasting is limited to four days in practically every case, though a fast day once a week in addition is necessary in most cases. In the second place, all that this treatment does is to rid the urine of sugar and to increase the patient's tolerance for starch and sugar to a point materially above what it was when he had diabetes. However, if he goes beyond his point of toleration his diabetes will reappear.

We see in this a resemblance to consumption. The open air-rest-diet treatment of consumption will arrest the disease. It will increase the patient's tolerance for bacteria, dust, and bad air. But if he push his indulgence in bacteria, dust, work, poor nutrition, and bad air beyond the breaking point his consumption will reassert itself.

Again diabetes parallels consumption in that the curable cases, speaking generally are those which are taken early. A large percentage of the late cases cannot be cured by anybody. Most of the cases which are taken early can be cured, using the word cure in the sense indicated above.

Nannyn says: "From my experience I consider it highly probable that among the early, strictly treated cases, which originally were considered severe, but later ran a favorable course, there is many a one which must thank this early strict treatment, while, on the other hand, there can be no doubt that the cases which run ultimately a severe course underwent very little or no care."

If diagnosed early the disease can be cured without prolonged or expensive treatment. As we know very well the cure of late cases of consumption is not possible without a great expenditure of time and money, and those not in a position to give up the time, to live for a long time without income and without worries stand little chance of getting well.

The cure of late diabetes, as well as the cure of late consumption, is limited to the rich. As in the case of consumption, there must be periodic health examinations if cases are to be found in the earlier stages. Urine examinations of supposedly well people once or twice a year are a necessity for a general campaign against diabetes. Examinations of the chests of supposedly well people once or twice a year are a necessity for a campaign against consumption.

Curative care given to diabetics would represent no small program in itself. Barringer, as the result of life insurance examinations made on 72,000 adults, came to the conclusion that about 2 per cent of the grown people have diabetes; 1.895 per cent of these 72,000 had sugar in the urine. Joslin, estimating that 1 per cent of the population has diabetes, thinks there are 1,000,000 diabetics in the United States.

Apparently the disease is on the increase. The figures for death from diabetes in Great Britain indicate that diabetes is nearly twice as prevalent as it was in 1892. The death rate from diabetes in 1913 was about one and a half times that of 1900.

For this increase there are two explanations: The increase in the average duration of life brings a large proportion of the people into the diabetes age. The people are eating more than they were a generation ago. More of them are digging their [diabetes] graves with their teeth.

To cure, or even to treat 1,000,000 diabetics is no small matter. Probably not 50,000 of them are being properly treated, and not 500,000 are being treated at all. But, though the care of the million diabetics is important, it is less so than is the need of proper understanding of nutrition by the 100,000,000 people. Dr. Joslin says: "The application of fasting and exercise as therapeutic procedures for diabetic patients is probably having a much broader influence than Dr. Allen at first expected. Tuberculosis gave consumptives and the rest of us fresh air. The modern treatment of diabetes is giving the community very definite ideas about diet and the desirability of maintaining the body in the best possible physical condition. Between the consumptive and the diabetic we have little excuse to be ill."

The consumptive, in order to be cured, must live in the open air, rest a good part of the day, and overeat. Extreme measures. To prevent becoming a consumptive a person must have enough fresh air, he must not overwork, and he must have plenty of good food. The curative program, but on a minor key. Speaking generally, the persons susceptible to consumption are the thin, underweight people.

The diabetic, in order to be cured, must fast, at first entirely and then for one day a week. He must eat a very limited regulated diet and he must exercise. To prevent becoming a diabetic a person must not overeat, he must properly regulate and limit his diet and he must exercise. Again the curative program in a minor key. Speaking generally, the persons susceptible to diabetes are the obese, overweight people, the heavy eaters.

We did not make much headway with consumption until the general run of physicians and the general run of the people began to know a good deal about the disease. The physicians had to learn what symptoms indicated the oncoming of consumption, to learn to make a microscopic examination, an analysis of the symptoms, a tuberculin test, and a physical examination. The people had to learn the early symptoms which justified suspicion of tuberculosis, the need of fresh air, the reason for fresh air, the method of getting it, some of the principles of ventilation, something about food values, and, finally, enough of applied bacteriology so that they understand contagion.

We will not make any headway against diabetes until the general run of physicians and the general run of the people begin to know a good deal about the disease. There are a million people to be cared for. To properly care for them a great many physicians must become expert in treating the disease. One in Waukesha, a few in Boston, New York, Baltimore, Chicago, each, is not enough. The methods of diagnosis, and, especially, the laboratory tests, must be kept simple enough for the general run of physicians.

But what is more important, the people generally must know something about the meaning of such terms as carbohydrates, sugars, starches, proteids, fats, calories, diacetic acids, and acidosis. They must know the number of calories in a slice of bread and in every other simple article of diet, or they must have tables showing such values easily accessible. Nor is it difficult to understand the meaning of carbohydrates, how much carbohydrates a potato contains and how many potatoes, slices of bread, and lumps of sugar a person can stand and should eat. To learn about calories and quantities of carbohydrates is a much simpler, easier proceeding than to learn bacteriology and the average stock of information about bacteria is both good and accurate.

SHOULD CHANGE DIET.

Mrs. L. M. M. writes: "Is petrolatum injurious in any way? It was recommended for me by a physician. I hesitate in giving it to my 14 year old daughter, who suffers from constipation. Lately I have noticed pimples on her face. That is from sweets, of which she is very fond. My foods are of the finest, and my other children, 16 and 10, do not suffer from the stomach. Would you advise what not or what she should eat, through your column?"

REPLY.

Petrolatum is harmless. However, the use of medicine, of whatever sort, is not the best way to cure constipation. Why not accept the symptoms for what they are—proof that the diet and method of living are not what they should be? If through the aid of petrolatum or some other medicine she misses this rock, you can be certain she is headed for some other, and the next one may be a killer. She should eat less sweets and more fruit, vegetables, bran bread, and other coarse articles of diet.

PALPITATION OF HEART.

Mrs. T. S. H. writes: "Is palpitation of the heart dangerous? I have it so much, and especially after doing a hard day's work, or if I am the least bit nervous. For instance, while doing my ironing recently I found it necessary to lie down quite a few times, my heart was so bad. It beats so fast and hard and is so weakening. I doctored for this over eight years ago, but have done nothing since for it."

REPLY.

Palpitation of the heart may be due to heart disease, tobacco poisoning, indigestion, distention of the abdomen, or thinking about the heart. Whether or not a given case is dangerous depends on the cause of the palpitation. As you have had it for eight years, probably it is not due to organic heart disease in your case. Nevertheless you are not justified in treating it lightly. No one ever is. You should have an examination. Whatever cause is found for it must be removed. If you have organic heart disease your heart muscle must be strengthened. When tobacco is the cause its use must be discontinued. If any bad habit, physical or mental, is the cause, it must be corrected.

RUPTURE.

M. F. F. writes: "I am a man of 27 and ruptured. Although I have been that way for two years, my rupture is small, for I am wearing a good truss. I am fond of exercises, but I fear if I do my rupture will spread. Would you kindly advise me the kind of exercise I ought to take? Is boat rowing harmful? Would deep breathing cause the rupture to spread? The rupture never causes me any pain. Is dancing harmful? Is it necessary for one to sleep with his truss on?"

REPLY.

Rowing is not harmful unless it causes colicky pains. You can play golf, bowl, play billiards, walk, and ride horseback. Neither dancing nor deep breathing is harmful unless it causes pain. Few people need to wear their trusses while in bed.

DR. COFFEE.

Mrs. E. W. writes: "Enclosed find advertisements of Dr. Coffee. What do you think of his treatment for cataract of eyes, which I have?"

REPLY.

Dr. Coffee and his absorption method were exposed in Collier's Weekly Sept. 1, 1916. You can read an exposure of Coffee and his methods in "The Great American Fraud," pages 101 to 104 and pages 173 and 175. Send 25 cents to the Press of the American Medical Association, 535 North Dearborn street, Chicago, and get a copy of "The Great American Fraud." It may save you money—or your sight.

NORTH ROCKWELL STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

Chicago, Sept. 15.—[To the Friend of the People.]—When will North Rockwell street, between Devon and Albion avenues, be improved with sewer, water pipes, sidewalks, etc. H. B.

This board advertised for bids for the construction of a sewer in Rockwell street between Devon avenue and Albion avenue. These bids have been opened and the contract will be awarded within the next ten days. The assessment will be put into collection about four months after completion of the work. An estimate has been made by the engineer of the cost of construction of water supply pipe in a system of streets including Rockwell street between Devon and Albion avenues and a public hearing will be held thereon some time this fall. The improvement will probably be made in the summer of 1917. The contract for the construction of cement sidewalks on a system of streets including Rockwell street between Devon and Albion avenues has been awarded to a contractor, who will start work as soon as possible, with a view to completing the improvement this fall, in which case the assessment will be payable in the spring of 1917.

LIGHTING SUNNYSIDE AND WILSON AVENUES.

Chicago, Sept. 14.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Would like to know if the city does not intend putting in a better lighting system on the streets west of Western avenue to the river and from Montrose north to Lawrence? In most cases the arc lights are hidden by the trees. Sunnyside and Wilson avenues being especially dark, and it is quite unsafe for a girl or woman to be out alone on these streets after 10 p. m. D. M. H.

We have plans in hand for the rehabilitation of the street lighting system in the neighborhood referred to. This will provide for enough additional new lamps to reduce the spacing from 330 to 220 feet and will bring the lighting of these streets up to the established standard.

MICHIGAN REAL ESTATE.

Aurora, Ill., Sept. 14.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—A married woman living in Illinois owns real estate in Michigan in her own name. If the husband dies can his will affect this property, or can his heirs claim any part of it? If the wife dies can she will all this property to some one else or what portion, if any, must go to the husband? Is this governed by the laws of the state where the parties have resided or the state containing the property? If an Illinois man fails to pay alimony to a divorced Michigan wife, what is the penalty, and how can it be enforced? A. K.

1. No.
2. Dower interest in one-third if there are children, one-half if no children, and dower interest in one-third of other half.
3. Laws of state of residence.
4. None—unless you can get him within the jurisdiction of the Michigan court or he has property in Michigan.

RESPECT FOR THE ARMY.

Chicago, Sept. 21.—[Editor of The Tribune.]— THE TRIBUNE carries a story of a controversy between Capt. F. R. Kenney, head of the United States army recruiting service, and Judge Harry M. Fisher regarding a young man figuratively sentenced to the army when charged with the theft of a bicycle.

Capt. Kenney is absolutely right in his contention, irrespective of anything that might have been said or done by his subordinates in the recruiting office. Since Judge Fisher gave the young man the alternative of going to Pontiac or joining the army, it would appear that the charge against him was correct.

Ordinarily it is difficult to persuade a man to enlist in the United States army or navy. Only when war is threatened and patriotic ardor is fanned are enlistments at all numerous, and there is a very definite reason.

For years many judges and eminently respectable "highbrows" have persistently placed the enlisted man on the same plane as the felon, and they are positively and directly responsible for the disrepute into which the enlisted man has unfairly fallen.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES IN SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

Chicago, Sept. 21.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Lest "L. L." may not be sufficiently convinced by your reply to his rather stormy question in your column of Sept. 7, and for fear that another equally narrow minded person may some time ask a similarly prejudiced question, may I refer you to section 115 of the school laws of Illinois, entitled "An Act to Establish and Maintain a System of Free Schools, Approved and in Force June 12, 1909," which reads as follows:

"The board of school directors shall be clothed with the following powers:

* * * * * * *

"Tenth, To have the control and supervision of all public schoolhouses in their district, and to grant the temporary use of them, when not occupied by schools, for religious meetings and Sunday schools, for evening schools, and literary societies, and for such other meetings as the directors may deem proper," etc.

Trusting that your worthy paper will continue to help us in our campaign to make the public schools the public forums of the people, for every worthy purpose, I am.

PAY FOR GUARDSMEN.

Quincy, Ill., Sept. 20.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—The new defense act has been in effect since July 1. This is the bill that is supposed to carry pay for the militia.

So far no one has been able to get any one to say whether it is settled fact that those of the guard who have taken the federal oath and are attending the prescribed number of drills, etc., are going to be paid. Every one presumes that they will be paid, but no one is sure.

A newspaper can break in and get attention, information, etc., when no one else can.

MORE SCHOOL BUILDINGS NEEDED.

Chicago, Sept. 21.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—During the course of the last few months, when Chicago was suffering from the unprecedented heat wave, there has been a steadily growing agitation in favor of more beaches and places of public amusement. There seem to be no opponents to the demand, but possibly before anything is done we should consider the condition of the school. In too many of the schools the rooms have been found inadequate to house the rapidly increasing number of school children and portable buildings have been resorted to in order to take care of the overflow. It would certainly be more humane to build enough real schools to take care of the children than to add to an already complete system of beaches.

It might also be well for the [illegible] of private schools to consider the plight in which we would be placed should the immense number of public school pupils be made dependent upon us for their education.

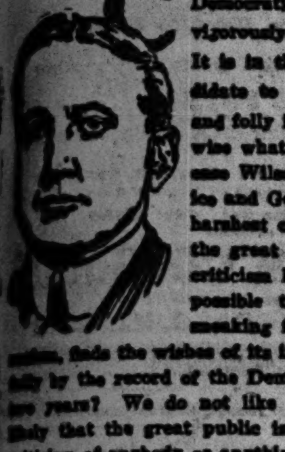
Cannot some form of legislation be introduced that will make drivers of machines liable for death or injury to a child? Such a law would tend to reduce the number of careless drivers to a great extent, I believe. A [illegible]

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

by Robert Herrick



CANDIDATE HUGHES has abused the Democratic administration, abundantly, vigorously. That was to be expected. It is in the rôle of the opposition candidate to find all manner of weakness and folly in the party in power. Otherwise what is he for? Moreover, in this case Wilson and Wilsonism, in re Mexico and Germany et al., are open to the harshest criticism. But the reaction of the great public to Candidate Hughes' criticism has been disappointing. Is it possible that the great public has a sneaking fondness for Wilson and Wilsonism, finds the wishes of its inmost heart interpreted faithfully by the record of the Democratic party during the last two years? We do not like to believe that. It is more likely that the great public is not fond of pure, undiluted criticism of anybody or anything, feels that even the yellowest dog must have some good points in him. Criticism, necessary as it is for clearing the ground, is always open to the objection of being "negative," "unconstructive."

The Republican candidate might have remedied that defect by injecting into his denunciations some suggestions of what he would have done or will do when he gets the chance. For if elected he will surely have an opportunity to try his hand on Mexico, probably on the submarine crime, and other international complications. But his criticism has contained no hint of positive remedies, only vague generalities—it has been peculiarly arid. He has been hopelessly negative.

The colonel is a much better abuser than the ex-justice as a matter of fact. Witness his recent speech at Lewiston, Me. There is a man who knows how to take off the gloves and make a bloody mauling interesting! The colonel puts passion into his excoriation and wields a more picturesque vocabulary. Above all he lets his audience guess pretty accurately what he would have done under the circumstances, how he would handle similar circumstances if he had the chance—exactly the opposite from what the president has done. His personality is a constructive program in itself, which the Republican candidate's is not. If the campaign were to be won on pointing out Democratic failures it would be much better to have the colonel for the candidate, as no doubt many prominent Republicans are now realizing too late. The best that can be done now is to hand over the abuse issue to the colonel exclusively and allow the candidate to occupy himself with the more congenial task of outlining his policies and elucidating his idea of constructive statesmanship. It would be an excellent division of labor. The Republicans need team work before it is too late.

POSSIBLY Mr. Hughes' realization of his failure as a pure critic led him to dilate on such stale issues as the tariff, civil service, national budget, etc., etc. But a fervid advocacy of that Republican panacea, a high tariff, exalted periods on the beauties of a pure civil service, and devotion to national economy are not sufficient to arouse more than a pale acquiescence in the breasts of partisans.

Even a correct distinction between real prosperity and Democratic prosperity is too academic to fire the common voters' passions. They take it for granted that the aspiring candidate of the party not in power believes in a pure civil service—until after election he is caught in some legislative impasse with an entirely practical party majority in congress, when he will fall back perforce upon the patronage bribe to buy necessary legislation, as his predecessors of both parties have always done. It goes without much saying that the United States should send excellent trained diplomats to foreign powers and maintain an efficient consular service, but everybody knows that the Republican candidate, once in power, will follow the dishonored tradition of the republic by paying his campaign debts to millionaire partisans in diplomatic appointments. If the Republican brand of millionaire happens to be more intelligent than the Democratic, that is hardly to the candidate's personal credit.

The American people are not even mildly interested in the personalities of our diplomats. Nor are they much more eager over the ideal of national economy: they know that is a suitable subject for a candidate's conviction, but they also know that no president has ever been able wholly to withstand the pressure toward huge appropriations which a hungry congress exerts. And they know that the party out of power will always find the party in power scandalously extravagant.

No, these are not the subjects of thought that are keeping the American people awake nights this summer and autumn of 1916, and the Republican candidate should have discovered the simple truth before this. These excellent convictions emphatically pronounced on hundreds of platforms throughout the west will not elect him president, will not attract the allegiance of doubtful voters, will not convince the peace at any price man that the country needs a change of government. No longer will fervid professions of "Americanism," however undiluted, stir the voter's pulses. That stimulus has been exhausted: every candidate for aldermen these days is an undiluted American, whatever it may mean.

THERE are matters which vitally interest the American people, on which they have been doing considerable political thinking, and about which they look for political guidance—for leadership from a candidate for the presidency. They would welcome discussion and convictions on questions that have been brought into the world's mind by the convulsions of the great war. It is a new world, Mr. Hughes, that you are confronting, not the world of 1890 that could be stirred to its depths by the tariff issue. And the Republican candidate, in spite of the Victorian cast of his mind, must sometimes have thought on these new and vital problems. Does he not trust the American public with the results of his thoughts? For his mind must have been stirred once in a while to its placid depths by larger matters of statesmanship than tariff and civil service reform, Mr. Wilson's manifold weaknesses, and the Mexican horrors.

In those silent contemplative days in Washington while the candidate was still the justice (with presidential inklings) he must have thought once in a while of the very pertinent question of what is going to happen to these United States of America after the great war has been brought to a close. It is a thorny, a perplexing problem, what our foreign relations must become after world peace, but it is one that, if his aspirations are fulfilled, the candidate must meet very soon. For in the shaping and creating of a foreign policy our president has freest play. It is peculiarly his province to initiate and control the nation's foreign policies—with the consent, afterward, of the senate.

It is inconceivable then that the Republican candidate has not yet given more than a few cursory thoughts to the weighty problems that confront the nation in its relations to the whole world. What I for one would like supremely to hear from the Republican candidate is something about his beliefs and convictions on the rôle that my country is to play in the new world now dawning. What should be our attitude toward other nations of the world, specifically?

OF course, Mr. Hughes could emit platitudes, safe generalities; no doubt he has already done so repeatedly. (I do not believe there is a topic in the universe that he has not covered with sound platitudes!) But if he would satisfy the intelligent element of the electorate, which is larger and more influential than any politician likes to admit, he should do more than utter a cloud of generalities. It is not enough to patter about maintaining the national honor, etc., adequate preparedness, etc. It is not so much a matter of either defense or of honor that I am thinking of now, but of national influence, national growth, ultimate safety, and attainment of all that as a nation we have the right to aspire to.

Does, concretely, Candidate Hughes believe that the United States should bury its talent in the ground and keep safely (?) outside the range of world complications? Or does he think, as many good Americans are beginning to think, that the time has long since passed when it is either safe or noble for a nation of a hundred millions, potentially the most powerful, actually the richest in the world, to live solely for itself and its own prosperity? Can we, even if we want to do so, lead the hermit life of isolation among the nations of the earth? Can we peevishly complain when other nations are rude to us and trust to luck not to get "into difficulties" with them when our national creed is pure egotism—as interpreted by President Wilson?

Of course, the Republican candidate would prefer to let the other fellow touch this live wire first—try out public opinion on such a momentous question—or let events dictate his policies, once he is in power (like his predecessor). His campaign managers have probably told him that all this is "dangerous ground," to be avoided if possible—he should not "commit himself" during the campaign. The country is not yet ready for a policy that looks toward the abandonment of our traditional isolation in world politics, etc.

Politically, it probably seems foolish to Mr. Hughes' managers for their candidate to run the risk of antagonizing American parochialism. But they underestimate the American public! The policy of playing safe, of silence, and vagueness in this crisis of world affairs is no longer the shrewdest policy. The Democratic administration is on record as much by what it has failed to do as by what it has done badly in shaping the foreign policy of the United States. The one safest thing that the Republican candidate could do to insure popular respect and interest in his campaign for the presidency would be to prove to the country that he is neither afraid of this issue nor unable to be definite about it; that he has convictions which can be intelligibly conveyed to his countrymen about what must concern them more and more.

REVANCHE : :

By Charles Richet,

Member of the Institute.

Translated from Le Petit Journal, Paris.

REVANCHE! This is the fanatical word with which the Germans, ever since 1871, have tried to mock us. It has served them as an inexhaustible source from which they have drawn their heavy pleasantries. They believe or seem to believe that we wish to atone for our defeats at Metz and Sedan as a football or tennis player, who, losing at first, keeps on at the game feverishly, in order that some time he may win.

Apparently they cannot conceive that war is not a sport with us and that a free people does not amuse itself with spilling vast oceans of blood. They cannot understand, the idiots, that to France, sincerely and devoutly pacific, revenge means not the payment back for battles won, but rather the reparation of a violated and a sacred right. It means to us the freeing of our brothers in Alsace.

Today nothing compares in importance with the question of Alsace. By our victories and those of our allies the matter will be settled shortly. Alsace, whose soul is French and who has been so true to France for two long generations, will return again to her native country. Even now the Germans, not entirely blinded by their mad presumption, see the inevitable trend of events in this direction. Their leaders have mentally accepted the sacrifice. They know they will return Alsace to France. It is no revenge. It is a restitution.

However, there will be a revenge, and that revenge we will proclaim aloud that the world may hear when the time comes.

Since the start of the war, by the invasion of Belgium, by the burning and destroying of towns, the enormities committed against women and children and old men, by brutal exactions of all sorts, the Germans have frightfully transgressed every international law. There is not perhaps a single Hague agreement which they have not trampled ruthlessly under their feet.

Our revenge will be to act quite differently. We shall not say: "They have been cruel; let us be cruel. They have treated our prisoners with inconceivable harshness; let us exceed the bounds of imagination in our treatment of their men." No!

We will revenge ourselves as did those heroes of whom J. de Maistre tells. They remained human in the midst of insane carnage. I can state definitely that this is the wish of our government. It is the desire of our allies. We will none of us answer their crimes with crimes of our own nor punish their barbarities with like actions.

This, indeed, is true revenge! After the war—for this war must end—the neutral countries, all the neutrals, including the people of the Americas and of Europe, will divide in their mind, and perhaps as regards the distribution of their commerce, the belligerents in two classes. As in the valley of Josaphat there will be the good and the bad. On the one side there will be those who have clung steadily and tenaciously to law and conventions and treaties; on the other side those who have recklessly thrown aside the established order of things.

The world will see that the good will be the victors and that the bad will be the conquered. But more imperative than victory is the keeping of our flag pure and undefiled. We will conquer by arms, of course, but, too, we will win by the moral respect of all the world. And this last is not the lesser of the victories.

One hears often that this prodigious catastrophe in which we are being hurtled about is going to be fruitful renovations. And that the most significant of these renovations will be the establishment forever of the principle, often formulated, but rarely acted upon, that no real policy can endure except it be founded on justice. As has been said more or less humorously, one may lean on the bayonet, but one cannot sit upon it.

It was an enormous, criminal error of the German militarists—and believed unfortunately by the vast majority of the nation—to have asserted that "force is sufficient for everything; victory justifies all." Success even at the most detestable price is success just the same.

Let us not imitate the sinister example which they have inaugurated. They have shown what one should not do. They have pointed out the road that one should not follow. Let us give independence to people, to all people; liberty to citizens, to all citizens. Let us be faithful to a pledged faith and respect treaties written on paper. Let us not crush and destroy noncombatants, and even though our enemies redouble their inhumanity let us preserve our justice, our mercy, our kindness of heart.

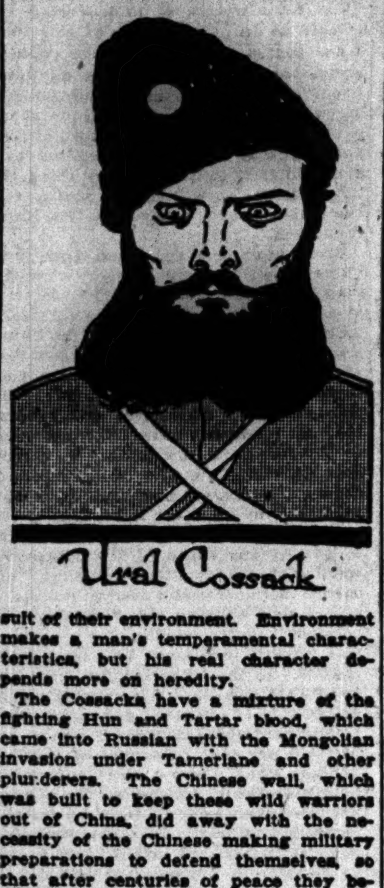
The recompense will be magnificent. Not only will history write our eulogy in time to come, but we shall win the admiration and love of all civilized nations. Beside being masters by war we shall be masters by peace.

This is how France understands the word revanche. To rise superior in compassion, in justice, in humanity; these will be reprisals worthy of us.

THE RUSSIANS

by Donald Durand

PETROGRAD. — [Special correspondence.]—I want to give my impressions of the real Russian as I know him in war and in peace. The real Russian is not a warrior, even though there are types of born fighters found here and there, such as the Cossacks, who are the products of the steppes, the Urals, and the Caucasus mountains. Like our cowboys, their fighting ability is the result of their environment. Environment makes a man's temperamental characteristics, but his real character depends more on heredity.



Ural Cossack

The Cossacks have a mixture of the fighting Hun and Tartar blood, which came into Russian with the Mongolian invasion under Tamerlane and other plunderers. The Chinese wall, which was built to keep these wild warriors out of China, did away with the necessity of the Chinese making military preparations to defend themselves, so that after centuries of peace they became unused to arms. This lack of military exercise is now proving disastrous to China.

We often read in history of this or that warlike people, but we forget that situations produce a warlike people out of a peace loving people, just as situations produce peace loving people out of a warlike people, as for instance, the case of the American Indians.

What kind of people are the real Russians?

The vastness of the territory they occupy, which is so difficult to conquer owing to the severity of the winters, the traditional agricultural instinct of the Slavic people, and the love of tranquility on the part of the Slavs, make them men of peace. Every one who knows the real Russian will tell you he is gentle and amiable, hospitable and generous, kind and courteous.

The Russian is slow, even slower than the Spaniard, for the Spaniard is at least active in speech. The Slav never hurries; he cannot be hurried. But when he does move he moves along like a bear and cannot be stopped. The low inertia governs him. He is hard to set into motion, but hard to stop when once started.

Who is the real Slavic Russian? Is he the man we see on the streets of Petrograd, Moscow, or Odessa? No, it is the plain moujik, the peasant, who is born and raised out in the open country on black bread and sour milk, caviar and fish.

The cities have a great population of people with much oriental blood in their veins, owing to the inroads of the eastern hoards which almost submerged the southeastern part of Russia and flooded the cities with semi-orientals. It is only in the country that we find the pure Slavic Russian. He is tall and fair. I like him. A good heart usually beats behind his coarse hand, which is more prone to give than to take. He often goes out into the field to gather flowers for the crude vase which stands under the invariable ikon in his simple log cabin. This is the material out of which the soldier of Russia is made.

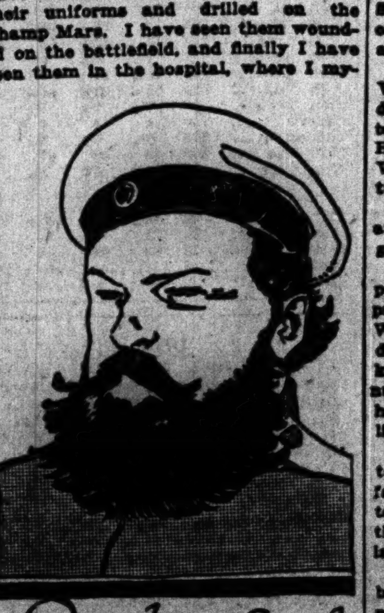
The great Russian army is composed of men who are as natural and simple as children. These big fellows still like toys and musical instruments. I have seen them when they first donned their uniforms and drilled on the Champ Mars. I have seen them wounded on the battlefield, and finally I have seen them in the hospital, where I myself tied bandages to their wounds and said cheerful things to them. Yes, I have seen them die and have held the hand of one brave fellow who passed away. He made no fuss, but simply stretched out his big hand to me, saying, "I'm dying; good-by." Russians may not be born warriors, but they know how to die.



Oremberg Cossack

As I have often looked down from my hotel window in various parts of European Russia during the last year and have seen the great religious processions of devout people following sacred ikons carried by bishops chanting their weird holy songs, I have invariably said to myself: "This is not a warlike people; their melancholy dispositions, their sorrowful music, their sad faces all indicate their love of peace, but they will gladly give up their lives for their convictions, for their country and God."

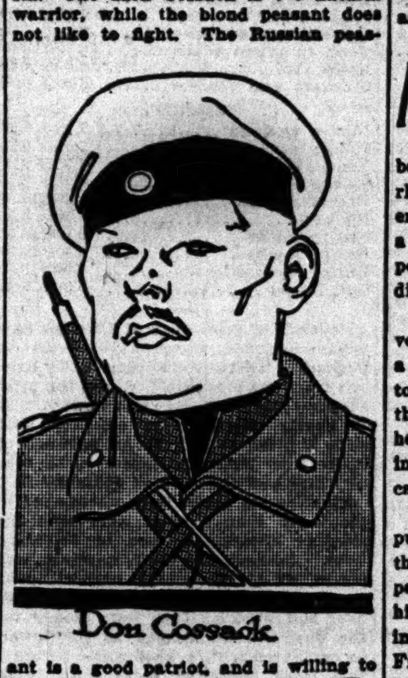
Evidently the Russians feel that the people of the central powers whom they took into their land as friends and granted the greatest commercial advantages, have unfortunately proven untrue. Although no true Slav ever liked a Teuton, and although a German is in all the Slavonic languages called a stupid person ("Nemets"), and although it is a traditional fact that all children of Slavonian parentage dislike the German language, still the Slavs of Russia have been kinder to the Germans than any other people of the world.

It is evident that the Russians did not want the war, for they do not like to fight and will not fight until they have no alternative. Genealogists have often asserted that it is the brunette and not the blond type that has fighting qualities. This would prove to be so in Russia. The dark Cossack is the natural warrior, while the blond peasant does not like to fight. The Russian peasant is a good patriot, and is willing to fight only in defense of his country. The Cossack, on the other hand, is inclined to fight from love of combat and desire for personal glorification.



Don Cossack

The new young Russian army now in the field, composed principally of the sons of peasants from Siberia, is, in my opinion, the finest army that was ever brought together in the history of the world. It is a well trained army, and although these youths are not aggressive, the very size of the army is such that it can move with almost uniform strength all along the front and overcome the tactics of concentrated movements on vital strategic positions.

The new young Russian army has been taught to sing patriotic songs. It has been trained in gymnastic exercises. It has been drilled to arms. It is well clothed and adequately supplied with ammunition. We can be certain that Russia is now prepared for war.

Hindenburg said, "This is a war of nerves," and if he is right Russia is certain to be heard from.

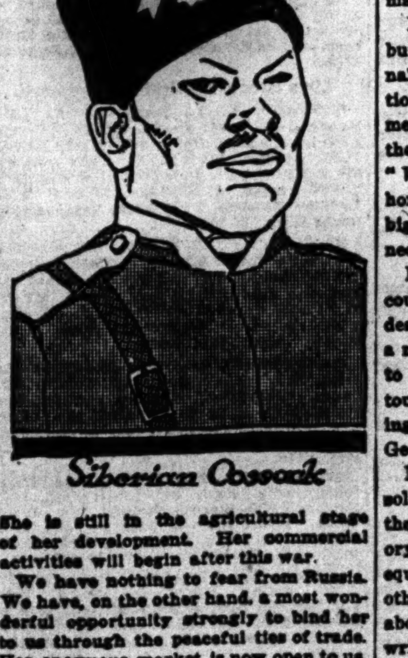
Will the exercise of Russia in the art of war become a menace to Europe? I think not. I am convinced that the Russian people will have a greater voice in the government after peace is restored. They do not want more territory and they will never wage a war of conquest. Militarism and conquest are foreign to the Slav temperament, and there exists no situation of national defense which would demand additional territory. Russia is a land of tillers of the soil who love peace and abhor war. She is still in the agricultural stage of her development. Her commercial activities will begin after this war.



Siberian Cossack

We have nothing to fear from Russia. We have, on the other hand, a most wonderful opportunity strongly to bind her to us through the peaceful ties of trade. Her enormous market is now open to us. Will we take advantage of the opportunity?

Our former ambassador, Giles, called attention to the fact that Russia is the greatest market in the world.

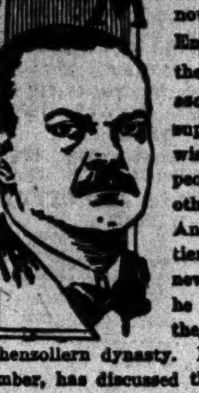
In this one nation are 200,000,000 temperate zone people who consume similar products to people in the United States. We are spending millions in the difficult development of the South American market of subtropical and tropical peoples numbering not even 75,000,000, who are half clad and who need comparatively little of our manufactured products.

Russia needs us, for she wants our tools, our machinery, and other manufactured products. Her ports are open to our goods, but we must not forget that the basis of permanent commercial relations is reciprocity.

"America and Russia have always been good friends, and there is absolutely no reason why they should not be eternally friendly," said Count Witte to me only a few days before he died.

A GERMAN REPUBLIC

By Edward Goldbeck



MR. H. G. WELLS is a famous English novelist; a gifted bore; one of those English authors who never learned, as the Frenchman has it, to "faire des sacrifices," that is, to eliminate the superfluous. "Cut it out!" is a very wise artistic principle. But there are people living who have read one or the other of his novels to the bitter end. Anglo-Saxons have a wonderful patience. This famous novelist has benevolently informed the Germans that he would be willing to forgive them if they would only decide to oust the Hohenzollern dynasty. Mr. Bernard Shaw, as you will remember, has discussed this proposition and has asked why in the name of often quoted and seldom beheld fairness the Germans should not suggest to England a speedy expulsion of the Hanoverians. He has, as usual, made some witty remarks, but I think he missed the really decisive arguments.

At first we must ask why the Germans should chase the Hohenzollern from their throne. Mr. Wells would probably give the only possible answer, the answer which is on the lips of many readers: that Emperor William brought this war over Europe. But the Germans deny that, and it is not very likely that the author of "Tono-Bungay" will be able to convince them that he did. They will say that they probably know more of the kaiser and understand him better than the cleverest foreigner could. And they might add that the haughty condescension with which England for more than a century has been dispensing to all the other nations the treasures of her political wisdom is one of the reasons why the English are almost as unpopular as the Germans.

MY personal impression is that the kaiser tried very hard to keep peace. He believes in peace and it was quite characteristic that some years ago he said about one of his intimates: "I love the count because he is a man of peace." On the other hand, his rhetoric, his restlessness, his ubiquity have probably accelerated the coming of the war, but it is a very queer and a little superficial idea that one man, however exalted his position may be, could bring on war and a war of these dimensions.

The causes of this war are so many and they are so involved and entangled with each other that it would take a well sized volume to set them forth. It is ridiculous to pretend that the emperor could decide to make war, and that the entire German nation would follow him like a herd of sheep. To separate the emperor and the nation is impossible; if the emperor should be found guilty, the nation cannot be absolved.

During the period from 1900 to 1914 dozens of books were published in Germany which predicted war, but I do not think that any of the authors thought of holding the emperor responsible for such an eventuality. We criticised his boisterous, Teddyesque ways and advised him to talk in a minor key, but we could not lay at his door Panslavism, French eagerness for "revanche," English commercial envy, Italy's traditional enmity against Austria, Serbia's megalomania, and many other problems which we knew would lead up to a decision by blood and iron.

The influence of the kaiser has been overvalued immensely—it could easily be proved that parliament frustrated his most cherished projects—and this is the more astonishing as hero worship (and hero hatred) seemed a thing of the past. The modern historians do not believe in Treitschke's categorical sentence, "Men make history"; they refer everything to conditions, tendencies, currents, and other impalpable powers, and these deified abstractions seemed to be safely enthroned in their irresponsible omnipotence.

But when the war broke out invincible human nature asserted itself and we looked around greedily to find a scapegoat on which to let loose our outraged morality. As Francis Joseph is too old to pose as the evil genius, and as Nicholas and George lack picturesque personality, the kaiser was the only available victim. But if the German nation refuses to believe that he brought on the war, if it, on the contrary, is firmly convinced that he did everything to avoid it (and even hesitated a little too long!) the only reason why the Germans should oust the Hohenzolern is nonexistent.

BUT even if there were any reason, the Germans would probably say that it is a little too early to take such a violent resolution. Very many, nay, almost all of them, believe that they will be victorious, that they will be able to annex the eastern part of France, compel Belgium to enter the middle European confederation, recover the Baltic provinces, and get a better frontier in the east. Let us assume for a moment that such a victory could be won; well, then William would be regarded as the greatest of all living men. And although such a victory is not probable, it is not impossible, either. So the Germans will prefer not to be too hasty about this matter.

I suppose that Mr. Wells does not talk for talk's sake, but that he is aiming at practical results. It is a little naive to exhort a dangerous adversary to start a revolution in the middle of war. Or do you think William would meekly leave at Liebknecht's bid? Even the French, when they read Mr. Wells' kind admonition, will smile and say: "Vous êtes orfèvre, Monsieur Josse!" One does not swap horses while passing a river, and a revolution would be too big a job for Germany at this moment. If she deems it necessary she will take her own time.

Does Mr. Wells still believe in revolutions, anyhow? His countrymen do not; they live on "precedents." They don't destroy at all; they leave the foundation as it is and build a new story. The English constitution resembles an old castle to which every generation has made an addition without touching the original building. They do as much modernising as is necessary, but the ancient walls remain. The Germans have learned that from the English.

Do the Frenchmen still believe in revolution? Only for solemn occasions when monsieur le prefet has to celebrate the assault at the Bastille or another event of dusty memory. Then he quotes les grands principes de '89, liberty, equality, fraternity; but read Tocqueville, Taine, Faguet, or other French thinkers and you will find them very skeptical about the results of the revolution. Mr. Wells has written scientific novels. Science teaches us that the terrific geological catastrophes are the result of infinitely small but numberless accumulated causes and efforts, and Darwin's last book treated on "the formation of vegetable mold through the action of worms."

GERMANY does not believe in revolution. The attitude of the German social democrats has proved it. They have talked a good deal about revolution, but every year the "evolutionary" wing of the party grew stronger. There were at the last election 4,000,000 Social Democratic voters. Is there any doubt that they could make a revolution if they wanted to? The army would be powerless against them. The reason which prevents such an attempt is not an external one, it is in the workman's mind. For the first time in history, masses—and masses as antiquity did not know them—have been guided by the scientific spirit, by a scientific theory which Karl Marx formulated and preached, and the essence of which is that evolution makes revolution unnecessary. Some people say that this theory has paralyzed the fighting powers of the Social Democratic party. If that be so, then Marx is one of the greatest benefactors of Germany and mankind. But, of course, in this case, too, many motives have worked together.

The idea of Mr. Wells, that one can "make" revolutions and constitutions, is astonishingly shallow for a man who has filled hundreds of pages with political theories. It is entirely eighteenth century, and therefore it will probably appeal to the American mind, for this nation lives in the century of Rousseau without knowing it. Our political and social ideas are taken from Jean Jacques' gospel. (Mr. Thomas J. McCormack, principal of the La Salle-Peru township High school, has touched on this problem in a very interesting pamphlet.) But these ideas have found a corrective in the historical German school, and the Germans know that constitutions which are "made" do not last and that they have to "grow."

To say that the state is an organism and to compare all its institutions to physical organs, is an unsound exaggeration and a pedantical stretching of the analogy. But on the other hand, the state is not a mechanism either, because in all its activities it has to deal with the necessities and passions of human beings. And so we may realise the fact which Mr. Wells willfully ignores or is not aware of, that the Germans, conservative by temperament and fortified by historical insight, do not expect anything from violent commotions, and therefore will obstinately refuse to make a revolution on Mr. Wells' authority. Charity begins at home—a very English saying, the Germans have no equivalent—and Mr. Shaw is right in asking: Why not begin with the English Junkers?

BUT there are other reasons why the Germans object to Mr. Wells' proposal. They think, firstly, that William is all right. They prefer a man to an abstraction, a cipher to a zero. They say that he may have made mistakes (and four years of Wilson administration ought to have trained us to be lenient), but that he has been and still is a wonderful stimulator. One thing is sure, that one cannot fool all the people all the time, and if dozens of clever men like Miquel, Ballin, Münsterberg, and many other, after repeated conversations with the emperor witness to his unusual personality, it is safe to say that he is neither an idiot nor a charlatan.

Literary men very often treat ministers and generals as if they were incurable cretins. Shaw does it continually, and Frank Harris, in his otherwise very interesting book, "England or Germany?" goes on repeating that "most generals are utter mediocrities, without insight or initiative." The German generals whom I have observed and known certainly were not. But writers mostly forget Schiller's words:

> "Leicht bei einander wohnen die Gedanken, > Doch hart im Raume stossen sich die Sachen."

("Thoughts are dwelling with each other comfortably, but things in space hurt each other.") A man may be a poor speaker and a trivial writer and in spite of these shortcomings possess the gift of action and organization. Authors mostly overvalue formal aptitude and underestimate the difficulties which the men of practice have to overcome.

Secondly, Mr. Wells, as a descendant of the eighteenth century, ignores the past. The Hohenzollern have been in northern Germany for 500 years. Prussia is their creation. In these 500 years there have been rulers of weak character and mediocre intellect, but not one tyrant, not one scoundrel. Even the worst of them had a sense of duty and most of them worked very hard and set a good example.

Compare this fact to the ascent and decline of American families. The grandfather makes a little money, the father very much, the son manages still to keep it, the grandson squanders it. In most cases the process is even more rapid. Of course the circumstances are different, but the analogy is not without value. And if you prefer to compare dynasty with dynasty, will you pretend that the Stuarts, the Bourbons, the so-called Romanoffs can cope with the Hohenzollern? In these 500 years they have garnered a treasure of memories which they have in common with the nation, memories of fighting, working, suffering which can hardly be exhausted.

When I was a boy I lived in a Prussian village. There was an old farmer whom we called Father Berger; I suppose he was in the sixties then. When in the course of a conversation we mentioned the name of the then reigning emperor he always touched his cap and said: "God bless our old Father Kaiser!" This one instance shows how deeprooted the affection for the royal family was in the lower classes, and in spite of the dissolving "Zeitgeist" there is enough of it left to make an ousting of the Hohenzollern a very dubious and dangerous undertaking.

IF Mr. Wells should say: "Why a dynasty at all?" I should answer him at first with the words of his countryman Pope: "At the form of government let the fools contest"; but if he should insist on a more pragmatic answer, I should tell him that to my mind that government is the best which contains aristocratic and democratic elements, and that this is the case in Germany. The idea of making Germany a republic would be just as foolish as that of making the United States a monarchy. Nations generally know, at least in broad outlines, what they want and need, and it takes a good deal of well meaning arrogance to assume the rôle of schoolmaster towards them. If I should like to retaliate, I might find something to say to Mr. Wells about English institutions. I may do it another time, but then I shall take care to have everything I shall put forth affirmed by utterances of English statesmen and authors.

All those people who, like Mr. Wells, indulge in prophecies, utopias, and plans for accelerating the arrival of the millennium, ignore the given conditions. There are two more objections to be raised against his idea, one is Germany's geographical situation, the other the German character. The geographical condition compels Germany to be en vedette, to be ready and efficient, to have an immense army, and the Germans believe that the monarchical régime is the best from the viewpoint of national defense.

The psychological condition is this: that every German is a born individualist and that only the strongest centralization can concentrate and integrate these millions of centrifugal volitions. If twenty Germans assemble and talk a matter over, there will be twenty different opinions. That is why the French call a quarrel about nothing a German quarrel, a querelle allemande. The German sees a principle at stake in every insignificant question and then he displays a doggedness worthy of his unfriendly cousins who are living surrounded and protected by the silver wall of the sea, and therefore can afford to indulge in unbounded individualism.

THESE problems are not matters of reason, they are matters of faith. If somebody tries to prove to me that the republic is intrinsically a higher form of government than the monarchy, or vice versa, I can only smile. These labels mean nothing. But if he says, "I believe in the republican system!" I bow to his conviction. Belief is beyond argument.

The only trouble is to find real republicans. Montesquieu said that the leading principle of a republic is "virtue." This sounds discouraging to all those who are willing to ponder a moment over the question how many people they have met in the course of their lives on whom they would be willing to bestow the laudatory epithet "virtuous." Liberty is a glorious feast, but without self-discipline it will degenerate into an orgy and the result is Katzenjammer.

FURTHER GAINS MADE IN WHEAT; OUTSIDERS BUY

Bullish Northwest News and Higher Cables Aid Bulls—Corn Stronger.

Wheat prices scored further advances yesterday, buying being again heavy, by commission houses and big local traders, stimulated by the bullish advices from Argentina, small receipts northwest, and continued active buying by milling and export interests. Premiums west and southwest advanced relative to the futures, notwithstanding the big upturn in the latter. Futures were 1½@2¼c higher at the finish.

Profit taking sales were heavy, but there appeared to be a good deal of short covering as well as new outside buying, which absorbed the selling. Harris-Winthrop, Armour, Lowitz, Slaughter, Barrell, and Ware-Leland were free buyers. Selling was scattered. Cables were 1@3d up, following the advance on this side, and continued strength in Argentine markets, with reports showing drought conditions serious in northern Argentina.

Northwest Conditions Bullish.

The situation in the northwest is becoming acute sooner than expected, with mills already hard pressed to find adequate supplies in many instances. The northwest terminals had 547 cars, against 1,206 cars a year ago, while Winnipeg receipts were only 460 cars, compared to 1,351 cars a year ago. Receipts here were 91 cars and primary receipts were 556,000 bu less than a year ago at 1,712,000 bu. Clearances for the day were 592,000 bu.

Cash sales here were 25,000 bu. Export sales at the seaboard were more than 1,000,000 bu. Bids for wheat in all markets were strong. There was some selling late in the day on reports Greece would join the allies, but this development has been expected, and probably would have little immediate effect on prices.

Corn Scores Small Gains.

Corn rallied and closed ⅛@½c higher, the main stimulus being the further upturn in wheat. Offerings were light early, but on the advance there was a good deal of selling, which reduced the day's gains materially. Cash prices were steady to 1c up, and there were sales of 40,000 bu. Country shippers are complaining of a lack of cars, as well as shippers who have grain going east. Cables were 2d up, and the pressure to sell late corn was said to have relaxed at Liverpool. The trade in spot was quiet. Receipts of corn here were 321 cars, with primary receipts 938,000 bu, or 25,000 bu more than a year ago. There were no clearances. Weather conditions were favorable, with cooler weather northwest, but unsettled conditions predicted, with probable showers. Armour, Comstock, West, Bartlett-Frazier, and Lowitz led the buying of corn.

Winnipeg Oats Lead Rally.

Oats were influenced by a firm market at Winnipeg, where prices again scored big gains, and by the strength in wheat. Local shorts were credited with covering large lines of oats, and there was a fair commission house demand. McLaughlin and Knight-McDougal bought December. Selling was scattered, holders of offers taking profits on the advance. Net gains for the day were ¼c. Receipts were 158 cars, and primary receipts were 1,021,000 bu for the day and 17,486,000 bu for the week, against 6,191,000 bu for the same week last year.

Provisions prices were not materially changed, there being a firm tone early, with prices shaded a little later. The cash trade conditions are about normal, and the nearby deliveries continue to receive support. Receipts of hogs were 9,000 with the market at the yards 5@10c up. The estimated receipts for Monday are 31,000, with 120,000 the coming week. Western receipts for the week were 391,200, compared to 369,000 last week and 263,000 a year ago.

Sharp Gain in Rye.

Rye was sharply higher, No. 2 selling at $1.25. Receipts were 7 cars.

Barley ruled strong. Malting was quoted 90c@$1.16 and sold 90c@$1.13; feed and mixing or mash malt quotable 80@90c, and screenings, 55@75c, with sales of latter at 73@76c. Receipts, 79 cars.

Timothy seed ruled quiet but firm; October closed $3.15 bid and March $3.30 bid; cash lots sold $3.00@4.50. Clover seed was steady with cash lots quoted $6.00@15.50.

Duluth flax closed 1⅝@2c higher; cash on track, $2.16½@2.17½; October, $2.16½; December, $2.15¾; and May, $2.19½; receipts, none. Minneapolis was 2c higher, with cash on track, $2.14@2.18; receipts were 16 cars. Winnipeg closed 1⅛@2½c higher; October $1.06½; December, $1.97⅝; receipts, 3 cars.

NEWS AND GOSSIP OF BOARD OF TRADE

Sales of wheat for export reported from the seaboard yesterday were over 1,000,000 bu, making between 2,500,000 and 3,000,000 bu in two days. Kansas City wired the cash demand for wheat was the greatest in the history of the trade. Premiums were firmly held in all markets, and the northwest mills were said to be bidding central Kansas for the wheat and paying high prices. Omaha sold 50,000 bu wheat for export on the best basis on the crop, with bids for more coming in. Local sales were 25,000 bu. Receipts northwest continue light, compared to last year, and Winnipeg arrivals for the day were about one-third as large as a year ago. In the west and southwest the shipments equal the receipts.

James A. Patten again is talking extremely bullish in regard to wheat prices. He predicts a great scarcity of wheat before another spring and believes prices will be extremely high. Local traders have switched to the bull side as a result of the changing price trend and the fact that northwest conditions appear to be becoming acute earlier than expected. Minneapolis continued to send extremely bullish reports in regard to conditions, and this served to keep bullish enthusiasm at a high pitch. Commission house buying was of a fairly general character, the demand being sufficient to absorb liberal profit taking sales.

Argentine news was bullish. The weather has cleared in the northern wheat districts of that country and the drought conditions are said to be serious. Rains reported a day or so ago were evidently not extensive, as cables yesterday said rain was needed in all sections, although in the west and south conditions are not so bad as in Santa Fé and Cordoba. Buenos Aires and Rosario wheat futures again closed strong and higher, with holders of cash wheat not disposed to sell. The Argentine news was one of the factors in stimulating buying activity in the Liverpool market.

London advices were to the effect that Great Britain intends to control shipments of commodities more strictly owing to the depletion of tonnage by submarine attacks. Shipments to the allies will be favord.

Indian wheat shipments for the week were 922,000 bu, compared to 368,000 bu last week and none last year. With the smaller shipments this week from North America world's shipments will be moderate.

One northwest line house having ninety stations bought only 5,000 bu wheat Friday. Other concerns also reported small purchases. The poor quality of Duluth receipts is checking buying.

Receipts inspected Saturday: Wheat, 91 cars; corn, 321 cars; oats, 158 cars; rye, 7 cars; barley, 79 cars. Hogs estimated for Monday, 31,000 head, and for all next week, 120,000 head.

Cash corn was steady to 1c up and oats were ½@1c up. Shipping sales were 40,000 bu corn and 115,000 bu oats. Car shortage is limiting both receipts and shipments.

Exporters and mills are making more inquiry for the old hard wheat in store here, but the leading holders are firm in their views as to prices.

Frank W. Sherwood posted a membership on the board of trade for transfer and John Simon made application for membership.

Choice Kansas turkey No. 2 hard wheat sold at $1.69, or 13½c over December, the highest price on the crop.

A further reduction in United Kingdom stocks and a decrease on passage was predicted by Broomhall.

Big milling concerns were credited with buying futures at Minneapolis.

Minneapolis wheat stocks increased 70,000 bu for one day.

COFFEE.

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—The steadier tone which developed in the market for coffee futures here around 8.74c for March contracts yesterday was in evidence again today. The buying was not active and appeared to find little fresh encouragement in the news from Brazil, but the recent decline of about a cent a pound had evidently left the market in a better technical position and prices responded to comparatively small orders. The opening was 1 to 3 points higher and the more active deliveries sold 4 to 5 points net higher during the morning, with March advancing to 8.80c. The close was net unchanged to 5 points higher. Sales, 25,000 bags. September, 9.05c; October, 9.06c; November, 8.80c; December, 8.84c; January, 8.87c; February, 8.89c; March, 8.92c; April, 8.96c; May, 9.00c; June, 9.04c; July, 9.07c; August, 9.11c. Spot coffee, quiet. Rio 7s, 9⅝c; Santos 4s, 11½c. Cost and freight offers were about unchanged, but a sale of well described Santos 4s was reported at 10.55c, London credits. The official cables reported no change in Rio. Santos spots were not quoted and Santos futures were 100 to 125 reis lower. Brazilian port receipts were 65,000 bags; Jundiahy, 43,000 bags. Rio cleared 17,000 bags and Santos 56,000 bags for New York, Sao Paulo, weather fine. Temperatures 84 to 88 degrees.

DRY GOODS.

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—DRY GOODS—Cotton goods were firm and active today and yarns were firm. Knit goods were advanced in primary markets to levels that will force much higher retail prices. Linens were firm, with buying satisfactory for next year. Burlaps were irregular, but tended higher.

Receipts of 8,500 hogs at Chicago Saturday included about 4,200 direct to packers. There were only 2,575 hogs left from the previous day, and the total supply offered on the open market was unusually small. The offerings met with a brisk inquiry at an advance of 5@10c over Friday's figures, with tops at $11.30 and the bulk at $10.50@11.15.

Final prices made hogs unchanged to 15c lower than a week ago, with the average showing a loss of 8c. The weekly average this week, however, was placed at $10.85, or the highest made since 1910, and showing a gain of 20c over last week's. Pigs were steady for the day and unchanged to 25c lower, as compared with a week ago. Receipts this week increased more than 15,000 head, while shipments showed a decrease of nearly 3,000 head. The indifference of the shipping demand was a feature of the week's trade.

Hog purchases for the day: Armour & Co., 3,900; Swift & Co., 600; Wilson & Co., 500; Morris & Co., 200; Hammond, 400; Western Packing company, 700; Miller & Hart, 200; Independent Packing company, 500; Brennan Packing company, 300; butchers, 800; shippers, 1,000; total, 9,100; left over, 2,000.

CATTLE.

Cattle receipts at Chicago this week exceeded those of any previous week in many months and were much larger than the arrivals for the corresponding weeks a year and two years ago. Prices suffered as a result, closing with the rank and file of beef steers quoted 25@50c lower than a week ago. Prime heavy beeves and yearlings did not show much decline, but they made up only a small part of the week's supply. Cows and heifers closed 35@40c lower for the week, while canners, cutters and bulls were off 10@25c. Calves were steady.

Cattle at seven western markets for the week 285,100, against 257,700 the preceding week, 210,000 a year ago, and 224,200 two years ago. Total for 1916 to date, 5,815,000, against 5,101,000 the same period in 1915.

SHEEP.

Fat lambs finished the week at a decline of 25@50c, while sheep were irregular, being steady for wethers and yearlings and 25c lower for ewes. Receipts for the week showed a substantial increase, being the largest of the year to date, which was partly offset by a larger outward movement of supplies. Feeding lambs and breeding sheep continued in urgent request and brought strong prices. Fat lambs topped at $11.00 and sheep at $8.75. Feeding lambs sold up to $10.50 and breeding ewes reached $10.00.

Why High Interest Cannot Last.

The total wealth of this country increases at an average rate of less than 6 per cent a year, and as the country grows older the rate tends to diminish. From this fact the conclusion follows inevitably that if any one will invest his savings at 6 per cent, reinvest all the interest, and induce his children and grandchildren to do the same thing the third generation will be millionaires and the fifth will own most of the wealth of the nation.

Books have been published recently in Chicago setting forth a theory that the reason bankers and financial counselors in general advise people of small means to buy conservative bonds is the bankers want to get the money at a low rate of interest and put it in business ventures that yield a high rate of profit, thus enriching themselves and keeping the real producers poor. Nothing could be further from the truth. A banker does not risk the money of depositors or clients in hazardous ventures. If he does his career as a banker is brief.

If an investor can get 5½ per cent he is getting his share of the increasing wealth of the country, including unearned increments and everything else.

In a new country the "unearned increment" grows rapidly, and because of this wealth increases by leaps and bounds. In the three decades from 1850 to 1880 the wealth of this country gained at hte rate of about 6¼ per cent a year. In the next three decades the rate was below 6 per cent. Because of this advantage which a new country enjoys it is not theoretically impossible for a western investment concern to pay 6 per cent compound interest. In other sections a promise to pay that rate is likely to lead to disaster in the more or less distant future. One striking illustration of this fact occurred a few months ago when a well managed eastern real estate company collapsed after paying 6 per cent compound interest for a quarter of a century.

United States Life.

J. G. F., Rockford, Ill.—The United States Life Insurance company last year checked the decline in business which had continued steadily since 1902. It wrote $3,192,266 of new business, its best record for many years, and increased its total of insurance in force by about $800,000 to $24,920,747. Surplus decreased $44,000 to $139,498, part of this decrease being due to the payment of a 7 per cent dividend on the $264,000 of capital stock. The company has been in business since 1850. A large proportion of the policy holders are old people. As the reserves are well invested, the policies appear to be safe.

Illinois Northern.

A. F.—The first and refunding bonds of the Illinois Northern Utilities were outstanding to the amount of $3,293,000 as of Dec. 31. Underlying them were $449,000 in two issues, both of which mature in 1927. In view of the relatively small amount of underlying bonds the refunding issue is well secured. The fixed charges in 1915 showed a large increase and the margin of safety declined to 75 per cent. The added charges are presumably rentals of additional property, whose earnings will improve under efficient operating methods.

Brief Answers.

J. A. T.—Preferred stock is entitled to a certain dividend before common has any distribution. If the preferred is entitled to its annual dividend in any year only in case the dividend is earned in that year it is noncumulative. If it is entitled to back dividends in full before common can have anything it is cumulative.

K. J.—The Inter Ocean Casualty company has been in business nearly ten years. It has $100,000 capital and on Dec. 31 last had $15,809 surplus. It has reputable backing and its underwriting operations have been profitable. It has earned and paid dividends to stockholders since 1910.

H. L. H.—The bonds of Swift & Co. are a more conservative investment than the stock of the Moline Plow company. Both have been reviewed heretofore.

To the Successful Young Men of Chicago:

This Is a Message from Young Men to Young Men

An opportunity has presented itself to a group of young men having successful records in their line of business.

It appears to be that GREAT OPPORTUNITY which comes but once to the average man.

It is too great an opportunity to be neglected and yet it is too large for present members of our group to handle alone. We have raised approximately $50,000, but feel that our undertaking should have an additional $30,000 working capital to insure the proper margin of safety.

Our business is based upon an established enterprise, which is now earning more than 17% on a $100,000 capitalization. These earnings can be doubled and we believe quadrupled by taking advantage of the situation which now exists.

We would like to associate with us as stockholders a group of successful young men each one investing a moderate amount.

We Urge Thorough Investigation.

RECORD COPPER DEAL MADE WITH ENTENTE ALLIES

Sale of 448,000,000 Pounds at 27 Cents Closed by British Agents.

The large foreign order for copper which has been hinted at was closed yesterday. The quantity is 448,000,000 pounds, to be delivered over the first six months of 1917.

This is understood to be the largest copper transaction on record and involved $230,000,000. The business is to be divided among the principal producers. The United Metal Selling company and the American Smelting and Refining company on account of their volume of business take the bulk of the order.

This large copper purchase is for the account of the British government to be distributed among France, Russia, and Italy. The price was approximately 27 cents a pound. The deal is regarded as putting copper metal in the strongest position known to the industry and an advance in price for all deliveries is regarded logical. The order will call for 25 per cent of this country's entire output from Jan. 1 to July, 1917, and makes copper metal for the first and second quarters extremely scarce.

Up to June 1 of this year, a period of six months, England, France, Italy, and Russia purchased a total of about 450,000,000 pounds. The present sale added to previous sales in the current year makes a total of about 950,000,000 pounds of copper, for which Great Britain and its allies have paid or contracted to pay approximately $230,000,000.

Buying on Traction Settlement.

Chicago City and Connecting Railways continued to be the feature of trading in the local exchange. The preferred advanced to 31 but closed at 30.

It is becoming evident that there is more behind the movement in this issue than the proposed doubling of the dividends at the December meeting. The advance in series 2 certificates of the Chicago Railways company, the activity in the 4 per cent income bonds of that company, and the advance in Chicago City railway stock from around 90 to 100 all appear to indicate a belief in important quarters that the local traction situation is in better prospect of solution than at any time since the agitation began about sixteen years ago.

Carbide Sells Off.

Union Carbide sold off rather easily from 164 to 161½. It appeared to be a matter of getting out of a stock that promised to be dull for some time in order to buy a more active issue.

Peoples Gas was in good tone at 110⅝. Swift & Co. shares, Stewart-Warner common, and other local issues were generally steady.

It is understood the stock of the Prestolite company shortly will be listed on the local exchange. A great deal of interest has developed in the issue since it became known that control of the company had passed to the Union Carbide interests. The Prestolite has 80,000 shares of stock of no par value, on which 6 per cent is being paid. The current price is around 114, an advance of about 24 points in the last two months.

An Unusual Exhibit.

The New York bank statement made an extraordinary exhibit, with an increase of over $25,000,000 in the excess reserve and a gain in deposits above $49,000,000. The surplus reserve now stands at $114,134,130. The reserve increase came necessarily from a large gain in cash which the bank statement showed amounted to $33,316,000.

While there was a slightly firmer tendency in the New York market at the end of last week, the bank figures indicated conditions favoring further ease. The statement follows:

ACTUAL STATEMENT.

Active Curb Market.

The local unlisted securities market has been extremely active, with a number of issues showing materially higher prices. Prest-O-Lite made an extreme advance of about 15 points on heavy trading, selling from around 100, closing at 114½@115. This stock has had a steady advance since the Union Carbide company is reported to have bought control of it. The history of the other two carbide subsidiaries—Linde Air Products and Oxweld Acetylene—has done much to make this particular issue a favorite.

Linde Air Products has shown a steady appreciation of some 40 points, closing at 250 bid, 255 asked. Oxweld Acetylene was in demand at 140. Kellogg Switchboard and Supply showed an advance of about 25 points on good buying, closing at 320 bid, with practically no offerings around current quotations. Inland Steel advanced about 20 points in the bid price to 390, with few transactions on account of absence of offerings.

Sugar Securities.

The sugar securities have been without special feature. Michigan Sugar was offered at 103, with little demand. Minnesota Sugar was quoted 115@120; German-American, 21⅞@22½. Holland-St. Louis remains unchanged at 16@17. Wilson & Co. preferred sold at 102½, ex-quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent, closing 102⅜ bid, with few offerings at 103½. United States Gypsum preferred changed hands at 99⅝ ex-dividend. The common advanced to 41⅝ bid, stock offered at 43. Reo Motor Car sold at 44½, closing 44½ bid. Reo Motor Truck changed hands at 46⅛.

Great Lakes Dredge and Dock, after selling at 114, was in good demand with sales as high as 117½, and closing at that price freely bid. American Chicle common was active, changing hands as high as 83, but reacting to 79 bid, offered at 81. The preferred advanced to 83 bid, offered at 86. American Fork and Hoe common was unchanged at 118@121. Some inquiry exists for American Hominy preferred at 71. The common is unchanged at 40@43.

Avery & Co. declared the last of the accumulative preferred dividend, amounting to 5¼ per cent. Stock is now selling ex-regular quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent and is quoted 99½@101. The common was 82 bid. Bucyrus common sold at 14¼, and the preferred at 62. Butler Bros. advanced in the bid price about 3 points to 260. Little interest has been displayed in Consumers. Securities of the implement concerns have been quite active at advancing prices. Deere preferred improved to 92½, closing at 92 bid, offered at 93½. Moline Plow preferred was traded in at 95¾, closing 95@96¾. Emerson Brantingham preferred sold at 43, but reacted to 40 bid, offered at 42. The common sold at 11.

Fall in Chalmers Motor.

Chalmers Motor declined from sales at 170 to 152. Packard Motor closed at 165 bid, offered at 170. Continental Motor improved in the bid price to 38½, with offerings at 39. Public utility securities continue in demand. Cities Service common advanced some 20 points to 320, reacting to 317 bid, offered at 320. Ohio Cities Gas was in demand around 69, after selling as high as 72½. Republic Railway and Light common was extremely active, advancing from 39½ to sales at 45, closing at the latter price. Northern States Power common was in demand around 99, with few offerings. American Public Utilities preferred sold at 73½; Commonwealth Power Railway and Light common, 62; Illinois Northern Utilities preferred, 86; Middle West Utilities common, 50; Middle West preferred, 80½@81¾; Standard Gas and Electric common, 15; preferred, 41⅞@42⅝.

NEWS OF THE FINANCIAL WORLD

The Public Service Corporation of New Jersey reports for August an increase in gross of $455,679, or 14 per cent over August, 1915, with a balance after payment of expenses of $392,417, an increase of $80,729. For the eight months ended Aug. 31, total revenues increased 13 per cent, while the balance available for dividends, amortization, and surplus was $3,864,609, a gain of $790,065.

The earnings of the Cerro de Pasco Copper company are running at the rate of $14 a share annually, with all the bonds converted, after deducting interest on the $10,000,000 ten year 6 per cent convertibles. The company is reported to have sold its entire production for 1916. At the close of this year the company should show a surplus of about $9,000,000.

August earnings of the International Mercantile Marine company, as officially announced, were $3,959,000, compared with $4,873,000 in July and $6,900,000 in June.

New York houses insist that the strength displayed by the trend and momentum of the market suggests still higher prices in the standard issues, especially United States Steel, Union Pacific, Anaconda, Utah Copper, and Central Leather.

According to Wall street gossip, General Electric and Sears-Roebuck common are referred to in prominent circles as being in line for extensive advances. The floating supply of these stocks is small, according to specialists.

Investment buying is reported to be absorbing the floating stock of the Western Union, which, according to one important house, should approximate in price the market quotation for American Telephone and Telegraph.

All the Byllesby Electric properties reporting for the week ended Sept. 16 show a gain of 974 customers. The electric energy output for the week was 23.70 per cent greater than for the corresponding period in 1915.

Total sales of bonds (par value), $1,975,000.

NEW WEEK-END RECORD SET.

New York, Sept. 23.—The two hour session of the stock exchange today was a fitting climax to the five preceding full sessions of the week, sales exceeding 1,000,000 shares, a record unequaled by any week end for many years. Incidentally, it marked the fifteenth consecutive day in which transactions approximated or entered well into seven figures.

Trading was again dominated to an enormous extent by United States Steel, the coppers, motors, and a few other specialties, while shipping issues, equipments, and munitions were heavy or at least irregular. In fact, the market was extremely one sided, rails failing to share in the movement to any appreciable degree.

United States Steel made an extreme advance of 4⅛ points to 117½, overtopping its previous high record by almost three points. Its contribution to the total operations was almost 30 per cent. Today's maximum for steel common puts it nearly within four points of the preferred.

Coppers Also Advance.

Other maximums included the leading coppers. Anaconda rose to 99 and Utah to 96½, with material advances in American Smelting, Inspiration, Kennecott, and National Lead.

Motors were unusually active, with new records for Maxwell at 97 and Stutz at 77⅝. Central Leather also sold higher than before, at 72⅛. These gains were offset by declines of 1 to nearly 3 points in Mercantile Marines, Bethlehem and Crucible Steels, Continental Can, Baldwin Locomotive, and sugars.

Continuance of railroad prosperity was indicated by the August report of the Southern Pacific company, showing a gain of $1,083,000 in operating income.

Bonds were steady. United States bonds were unchanged on call during the week.

THE TRUTH ABOUT MINING

In the Saturday Evening Post of Sept. 16 is an article entitled "Our Most Human Industry," by James H. Collins. It is about mining and mining investments, and is the most lucid, sensible and instructive story ever written regarding this great and profitable industry. It should be read by everybody interested in mining, but especially by those who buy cheap mining stocks under the impression they are investing in mines.

A wide reading of this story will save the American people millions of dollars annually and eventually result in more honest dollars being available for legitimate mining enterprises. We will send this paper free to those unable to obtain it.

The chances for success in a proven mining prospect, when developed under capable management, are greater than in most any other kind of business, while the profits are infinitely larger. We do not promote or sell stock in mining companies, but for many years have engaged in finding and developing bona fide properties of known or demonstrable value for and with our clients, and we invite correspondence from responsible persons who would be interested in operating on such basis.

WHILE the week's real estate market was along rather narrow lines, as reflected by the transactions reported and made matters of record, considerable improvement was shown on the whole over the previous week. Outside business property made a decidedly better showing than during the week before, while transactions in vacant involving large building projects were of an unusually interesting character.

The aggregate movement of flat property was large, although for the greater part confined to six apartment buildings. The downtown district was not represented in the week's business, but it can be said that several unusually interesting deals are in course of negotiation, two of which promise to be closed in the next week or two.

Wanderers' Club Property Sold.

Probably one of the most interesting deals of the week was the deal by which Murray Wolbach acquired the old Wanderers' club property, at East End avenue and Seventy-first street. Apart from the interest which attaches to the transaction by reason of the long occupancy of the property by the Wanderers' club, about seventeen years, it is of special interest from a real estate standpoint for the reason it involves the ultimate erection of apartment and business buildings the cost of which will approximate $2,000,000.

Mr. Wolbach, who has been a particularly large and successful operator in the south shore district, is reported to have paid $100,000 cash for the property, which comprises about eleven acres. It was conveyed by John A. Carroll. Mr. Wolbach will subdivide the property at once into seventy lots of varying sizes, the greater number being of 30 feet, while there will be others of 47, 25, and 55 feet frontage for the accommodation of large concerns.

Streets Go In This Year.

It was stated by Mr. Wolbach that nothing will be done this year, probably, beyond putting in the street improvements and extending Ridgeland avenue and Seventy-first place through the property. Building operations probably will begin next year, which will also include other property in that immediate vicinity belonging to Mr. Wolbach.

It is proposed to reserve the Seventy-first street frontage for business purposes, but nothing in a building way will be done pending the conclusion of the condemnation proceedings for the widening of that street. The remainder of the property will be improved with high grade apartment buildings, similar to the many which Mr. Wolbach has erected in that district during the last two years. J. E. Bistor and John J. Ready Jr. of W. K. Young & Bro. were the brokers in connection with the sale of the land.

The property, which is bounded by Seventy-first and Seventy-second streets, East End and Constance avenues, has been occupied by the Wanderers' club since 1899, moving there from the old Comiskey park site at Thirty-fifth street and Wentworth avenue. The club was organized thirty-three years ago and has had a prominent place in the early athletic history of Chicago. The club is said to have two or three other sites for a new home under consideration.

SUBDIVIDER URGES WATCH KEPT ON SITES AFTER SALE

In a communication from a member of the firm of William E. Harmon & Co. attention is called to an interesting fact in connection with subdivision property. It is that some subdivisions have been built up compactly, while others still lie dormant for the greater part.

According to the Harmon company, no property is really successful unless it builds up rapidly, no matter how quickly the lots may have been sold originally. Too many subdivisions are sold and then neglected, while in justice to all the operators' interest should not cease until every lot is improved as far as possible.

The same may be said of the street improvements. Everything should be kept in good repair as far as possible, and vacant lots should be mowed and kept neat and attractive for a number of years. In brief, a firm should stay with a development after it is sold and make every effort to get the right kind of buildings.

As an illustration of what building inducements and maintenance provisions will do for a property, the Ravenswood development of Harmon & Co. may be cited.

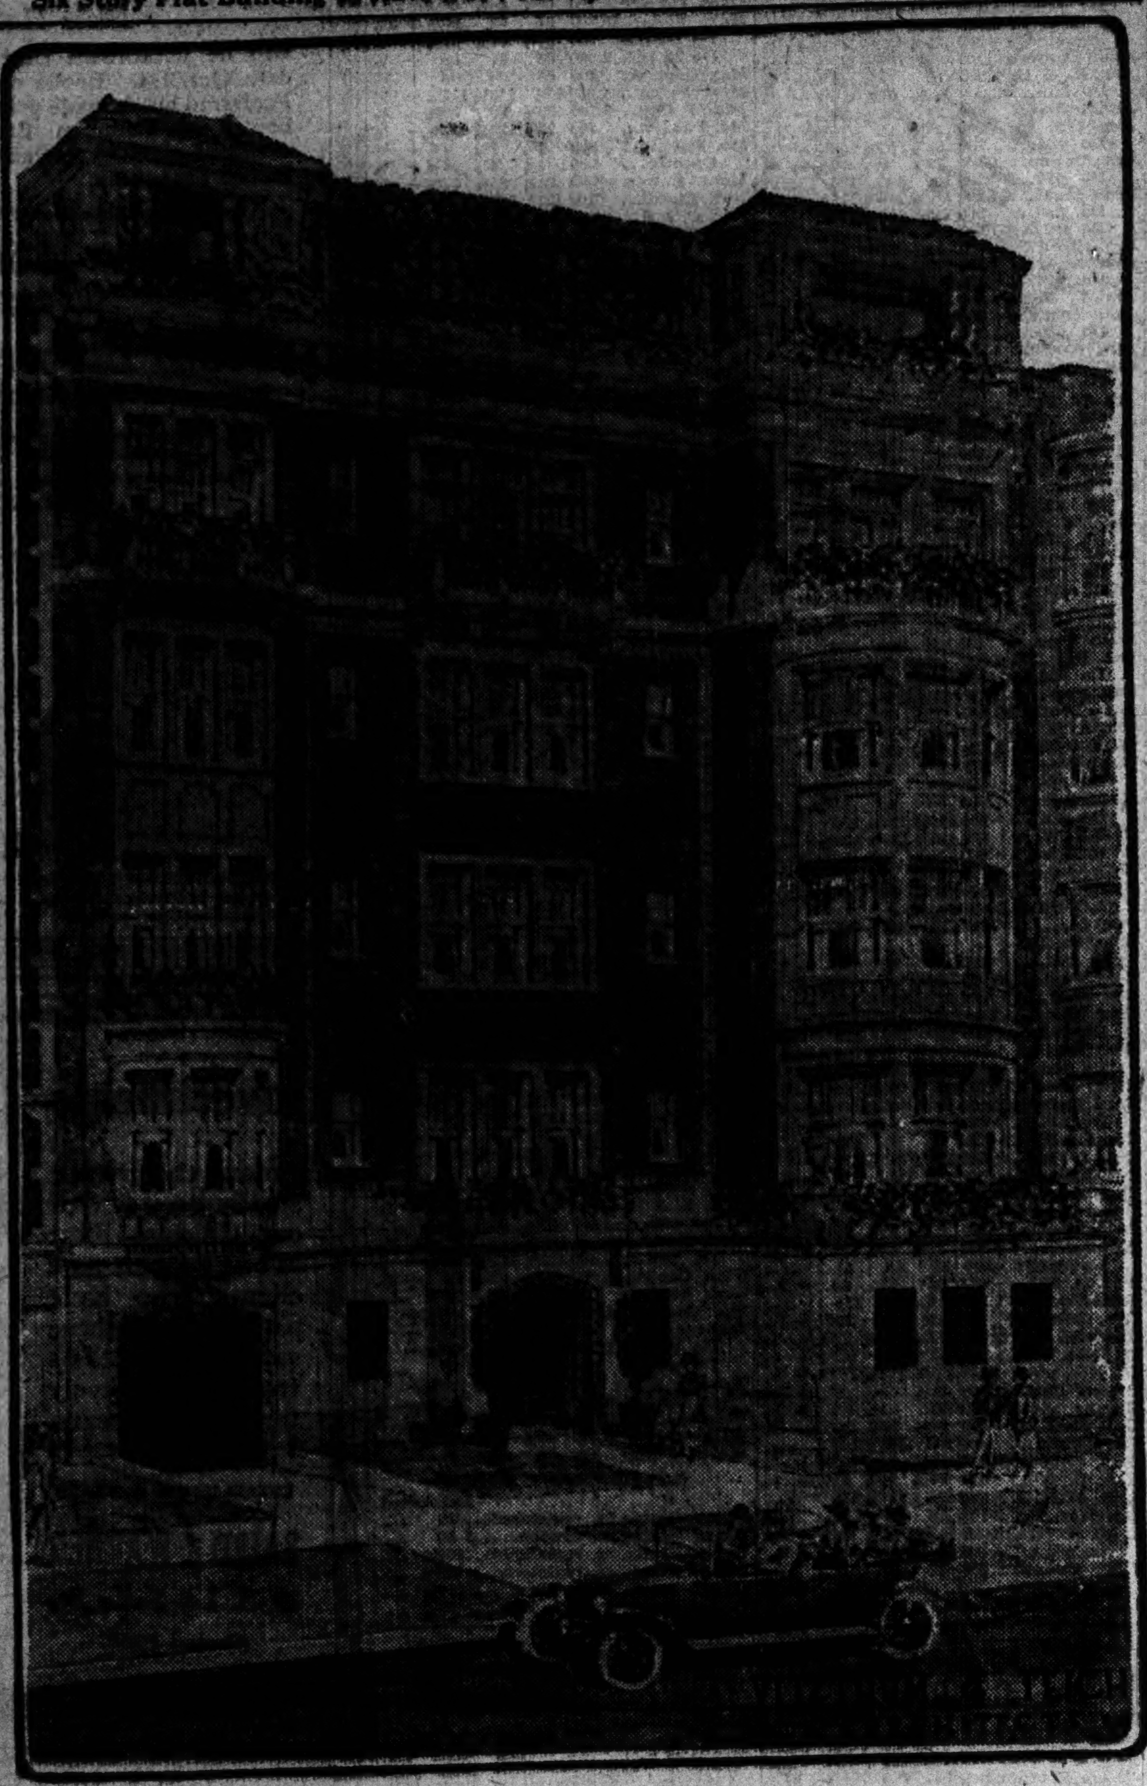
By actual count there are now 42[illegible] buildings erected, costing perhaps over $5,[illegible]000, and over 2,600 people live in the one-half square mile where five to six years ago was a yawning prairie.

Hospital for Limbless Soldiers.

The Marquis of Bute has subscribed $5,000 to a plan for establishing in the west of Scotland a hospital for limbless soldiers and sailors.

HERE'S UNIQUE HOME BUILDING

Six Story Flat Building to Have But Four Apartments; Two Floors for General Use.



An unusual apartment building is being erected by Mrs. E. S. Theurer in the Lincoln park district. It is located on the west side of Lincoln park west, 128 feet south of Fullerton avenue, and will occupy a lot 60x170 feet, the building covering 157 feet of the lot depth. It is unique in the fact that, while it will be six stories high, it will contain only four apartments, the first floor being devoted to an entrance hall, large entertainment room, with its retiring rooms and service kitchen, storerooms, janitor's flat, chauffeurs' rooms, and garage, while the sixth floor will contain a roof garden, guest rooms, outside sleeping quarters, and baths. Each of the apartments will contain thirteen rooms and four baths, and, while no announcement is made regarding the rent to be asked, it is understood it will be in the neighborhood of $5,000 a year. The building is to be constructed of reinforced concrete and will be fireproof. Its cost is placed at about $175,000. The main entrance is in the center, with the porte cocheres and entrance to the garage on one side. The front is to be of polished granite, Bedford stone, and a tan colored pressed brick.

MORRISON HOTEL SITE ONCE SOLD FOR ONLY $62.

Some exceedingly interesting facts are furnished by Edgar M. Snow regarding the Morrison properties, which have been much in the limelight recently as the result of the proceedings before Judge Landis.

Orsemus Morrison, an uncle of Edward W. Morrison, who died in 1884, purchased the 200x90 feet at the southeast corner of Clark and Madison streets from the government in 1833 for $62. The land today probably is worth in the neighborhood of $2,500,000.

Orsemus Morrison held the corner 100 feet, the fee to which is still owned by his two daughters, Mrs. George W. Spofford and Mrs. D. W. Mills. The corner was once condemned for a post-office site and was about to be sold for $275,000 when the government was offered the present postoffice site.

J. M. Morrison, the brother of Orsemus, died in 1870. He had acquired through his father's estate the 47½ feet on the east side of Clark street twenty-one and one-half feet north of Madison street, with a south frontage of 60 feet on Madison street, commencing eighty feet east of Clark, having a frontage of 20 feet on the alley north of Madison street.

Edward W. Morrison was the only surviving child of J. M. Morrison, who left him a life estate in the two pieces of property in Clark street, one north and one south of Madison street, at the death of Edward this to go to the city to furnish a fund for the erection of a school to be called the Morrison school.

Ezekiel Morrison, the third of the brothers, acquired 100x120 feet, west front, in Clark street, at the south corner of the alley north of Madison, and acquired through his father's estate the 21½x80¼ feet at the northeast corner of Clark and Madison streets. He left two sons, Charles W. and Lorenzo Morrison, and a daughter, Mrs. Abbie Nichols. The fee is still owned by the family, the ground being under long term lease to the Chicago Gayety Theater company.

RAILROAD COMPANY GETS SITE IN FACTORY DISTRICT

In a deal closed during the latter part of the week the Chicago Junction railway acquired a plat of 35,281 square feet on South Morgan street, between Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh streets, in the central manufacturing district, for an expressed consideration of $22,-[illegible], being at the rate of 65 cents a square foot. The property was first conveyed by George H. Christian and James W. Falconer of Minneapolis to Albert E. Lake, who then conveyed to the railway company. Hodge & Chandler were the brokers.

Leases and Loans.

A RATHER sorry showing was made in leases and loans last week, the number of transactions of any importance being next to nothing. Despite this fact, however, the statement is made by brokers in the renting field downtown that the situation is steadily, if somewhat slowly, improving, and the belief is expressed that the early winter months will find a greatly improved situation.

The Central Realty and Investment company reports the closing of sixteen leases in the North American building, having an aggregate annual rental of $36,700. It also has leased to Rothschild & Co. the entire seventh and two-thirds of the sixth floor in the All Light building at 1510-14 South Wabash avenue for a term at an annual rent of $5,000. Also to the Art Lamp and Brass company the second floor in the same building at an annual rent of $3,600.

John R. Magill & Co. reports seven leases closed by L. W. Bowen of that office, one being in the Rand-McNally building, La Salle and Harrison streets, and six outside the central district.

In a particularly interesting building loan, because of the low interest rate, 5 per cent, Foreman Bros. have made a loan of $20,000, five years, at 5 per cent to Max Annenberg on the high grade six apartment building he is erecting at 530 Belmont avenue. The building, which will also have six garages, occupies a lot 64x169 feet, and will cost $45,000. The apartments will contain six rooms, sun parlors, and sleeping porches. David Saul Klafter is the architect.

HIGH GRADE RESIDENCE ON THE NORTH SIDE SOLD

The sale of a high grade north side residence comprising the property at 617 Kennesaw terrace was an important market event of the week. The property, which is between Hazel and Clarendon avenues, has a lot fronting 136 feet by 144 feet and is improved with a handsome three story brick dwelling erected about three years ago and containing fourteen rooms. It has been sold by Kathryn Seymour to John M. Levis for an expressed consideration of $60,000. The sale was negotiated by James J. Parker of J. Grafton Parker & Co.

Horace W. Henshaw has purchased from Frances D. Yott the residence property at 504 Barry avenue, a twelve room pressed brick dwelling on a lot 72x172 feet, for a reported consideration of about $25,000. Paul Steinbrecher & Co. were the brokers.

There were a few interesting sales of vacant in which no building projects are involved. An interesting transaction in south shore vacant was the sale by James A. Brophy to Charles Rubens of the northeast corner of Seventy-first street and Cornell avenue, 300x162¼ feet, for a reported $20,000 cash. J. E. Bistor and John J. Ready Jr. of W. K. Young & Bro. were the brokers.

G. H. McKillip of Muskegon, Mich., has conveyed to Mrs. Emma S. Theurer the vacant property at the southeast corner of Addison street and Kilbourne avenue, 180x600 feet, for an indicated consideration of $35,000.

SEVERAL LARGE TRADES CLOSED IN APARTMENTS

Sale of 24 Flat Structure at Paulina Street and Juneway Terrace Largest Deal.

In the aggregate there was a rather large movement of apartment house property last week, but it was for the greater part confined to six apartment buildings, the number of transactions covering larger buildings being considerably less than for the previous week.

The most important deal of the week was the sale by Fred Becklenberg, the builder, to Mary P. Nieman of the twenty-four apartment building with 122x125 feet of ground at the southeast corner of North Paulina street and Juneway terrace, for a reported consideration of $110,000, subject to an incumbrance of $65,000. The building is said to have a gross annual rental of $11,320, and the buyer gave back a purchase money mortgage of $7,500, the balance being paid in cash. Regelin, Jenson & Co. were the brokers and will have charge of the building.

4836 Sheridan Road Sold.

Stanley Wolbach of H. O. Stone & Co. was the broker.

The apartment house property at the northwest corner of Warren and Albany avenues, lot 96x114 feet, south front, has been conveyed by T. J. Shearer to Frank B. Dyche, consideration nominal, subject to an incumbrance of $35,600.

Record was made of the transfer by Allen Sachs to Samuel Husman of the property at the northwest corner of Eddy street and Springfield avenue, lot 54x129 feet, with apartment improvements, consideration nominal, subject to an incumbrance of $25,000.

Deuchler Sells Apartment.

The high grade six apartment building at 919-923 Argyle street, overlooking the lake and Sheridan road, has been sold by Charles Deuchler to Kathryn O'Malley for a reported consideration of $41,500. To Real Estate Owners

WE have loaned millions of dollars on Chicago realty improved with high class apartment buildings, stores and offices, to the satisfaction of borrower and lender.

This week we loaned $50,000.00 for a term of ten years at 5½%, with prepayment privilege. Borrower pays nothing on principal for 5 years, and then pays $2,500.00 each year until 10 years, when the loan matures at $37,500.00.

If annual payments had been made during the first 5 years the rate during the second 5 years would have been 5%.

Which plan would you have taken?

We make loans for 10 years or less. Optional payments at any time of part or all of principal, at small premium.

If annual payments are made, reducing principal, interest rate will be reduced during last 5 years of loan.

Tell us about your loan and see what we can do for you.

FOOTBALL LID LIFTED WITH HARVARD VICTORY, 10-0

COLBY FORCES CRIMSON TEAM TO FIGHT HARD

Robinson Boots Field Goal and Casey Goes Across for a Touchdown.

Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—Harvard opened its football season in the stadium this afternoon to a lean victory over Colby by a score of 10 to 0. The visitors played pluckily throughout the battle, making five first downs, besides puncturing the Crimson forwards at times for small gains of three and four yards.

Harvard's scores were made in the first and final periods. The first points came at the close of the initial period, when Billy Robinson drop kicked a field goal from the twenty-seven yard line. The other count was made in the third period after Bill Murray, third string quarterback, started to handle the team.

Murray Shakes Pepper Box.

Murray put new life into the forwards and they opened large holes through which Casey and Horween slipped for small but effectual gains, which brought the ball from midfield to Colby's twelve yard line. Casey by some pretty dodging through the Colby back field made a touchdown on the next play. Moseley Taylor kicked goal.

The Crimson's rush line was inclined to be ragged, and late in the game, when the regulars had returned to the lineup, Colby three successive times made first down, Capt. Cawley, one of the stars of the afternoon, making one gain of twenty-five yards, the longest run of the game.

Flower and Casey Star.

Hank Flower, the young Harvard back, acquitted himself cerditably this afternoon, and Casey, who succeeded him, also showed class and made the first touchdown in the stadium this year. Harvard used twenty-six men against the Maine staters, who made but three or four changes. While the ball was in the visitors' territory most of the time, they fought back just as hard as they could. They were outweighed and perhaps outgeneraled, but not outgamed.

There is plenty of work ahead for the coaches if they expect to develop a championship team. The varsity line was heavy, and the forwards showed it in their actions. The visitors' rush line often got the jump on them, and this gave Half Back Cawley plenty of chance to shine.

Forward Passes Unsuccessful.

Three attempts at forward passes were tried, two by Colby, neither of which proved successful, and one futile shot by Harvard. Robinson had a fifty-fifty day in drop kicking, his first attempt falling short. Lineup:

Gerrish picked up Irvine's punt and ran thirty yards for a touchdown. A series of line rushes and a forty-five yard forward pass accounted for the other four touchdowns. Lineup:

CENTRAL A. A. U. ASKS FOR AMATEUR BOUTS

A nation-wide campaign to promote interest in amateur boxing was formulated at the annual meeting of the Central A. A. U. last night. Resolutions were passed advocating the passage of municipal and state laws permitting limited bouts and a committee was appointed to wait on various state and city executives to obtain their coöperation.

That the plans submitted are expected to be favorably viewed by Chicago officials and that the Illinois legislature will not be averse to adopting adequate laws to sanction amateur bouts, was the intomation of President Joseph C. Ritchie, George Lighger, and other members of the association.

Memorial for Dr. Herman.

Another resolution unanimously adopted at the meeting recommended to the city authorities that a Chicago public playground be named for the late Dr. George K. Herman, former president of the association. President Ritchie appointed a committee of three to wait upon members of the public playgrounds committee of the city council.

In the many reports read by the chairman of various committees a number of departures from the usual custom of the association were advocated. One of them was the promotion of interest among women in athletics. A committee was appointed to urge various women's clubs to organize swimming and basketball teams.

No Two Meets on One Day.

Handicapper Frank A. Martin asked that a rule be adopted prohibiting the sanction of two A. A. U. meets in a community for the same day. It was referred to a committee.

The following were reelected: Joseph C. Ritchie, president; Charles D. Lynch of the Detroit Yacht club, first vice president; George A. Schneider, Cleveland Athletic club, second vice president; C. P. Booth, Minneapolis Athletic club, third vice president; R. J. Redmond, Cincinnati Gymnasium and Athletic club, fourth vice president.

George Waterstrat, who has held the office of secretary and treasurer for three years, declined renomination and was succeeded in office by Louis B. Reitman of Chicago.

The following clubs were admitted to membership:

American Athletic federation, Minneapolis; Cleveland Yacht club, Cleveland; Northwestern Canoe association, Minneapolis; Chicago Columbian Circle Rifle association, Chicago; Toledo Amateur Athletic association, Toledo; British American club, Chicago; Swedish American Athletic association, Chicago; Celtic American Athletic association, Minneapolis.

PARMER, FORMER MAROON, HURT IN GRID PRACTICE.

Lexington, Va., Sept. 23.—Oscar Parmer of Washington and Lee university broke his shoulder bone in the first scrimmage of the year. Parmer played quarter back on the 1915 freshman varsity at the University of Chicago. He came to Washington and Lee with Jerman Crile, a teammate last year.

GIANTS' RECORD NOW 19 IN ROW; TAKE TWIN BILL

New York, Sept. 23.—By winning two games from St. Louis, 6 to 1 and 3 to 0, the New York Nationals won the nineteenth straight game and tied the modern record for successive victories, made by the Chicago White Sox in 1906. Like the Chicago winning streak, New York also had a tie game in its string of victories. The locals now need only one victory to tie the major league record of twenty straight, made by the Providence Nationals in 1884.

In the first game Tesreau had an easy time with the St. Louis batsmen after New York had batted out a three run lead in the first inning.

New York played a great fielding game throughout the double header. A heavy rainstorm brought the second game to a close after seven innings had been played. Scores:

BRAVES WIN AND TIE.

Boston, Mass., Sept. 23.—Boston defeated Pittsburgh, 4 to 2, in the first game of a double header and battled thirteen innings to a 1 to 1 tie in the second game, which was called on account of darkness. Neither Ragan nor Rudolph, the Boston pitchers, allowed a base on balls. Magee's hitting featured the second game. Scores:

ALEX BEATS REDLEGS TWICE FOR PHILLIES

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 23.—For the second time this week a Philadelphia pitcher won both games of a double header, Alexander equaling Demaree's feat against Pittsburgh by defeating Cincinnati, 7 to 3 and 4 to 0. In the second Alex broke the major league shutout record established by himself this season when he pushed the mark to fifteen.

In the first game each of the Phils' seven hits counted in the scoring, while one-half of the Reds' dozen safeties were wasted. In the second game Philadelphia hit Toney hard in three innings.

"KID" HOWARD POURS AT TEA FOR FAIR FISTIC FANS.

It has come at last. No more can arrogant New York, effete Boston, or other cultured centers of the east speak slightingly of Chicago as a frontier town, "somewhere out west." No longer will they dare picture Indians, cowboys, pork and beef when our fair city is mentioned. From our rough and ready days we have progressed to that advanced stage which finds even the hardy sport of pugilism, with some of its foremost gladiators, aligned with that standby of polite society, a tea.

Yesterday Kid Howard was host at an "affair" to "bring out" the enlargement of the Arcade gymnasium, wherein brawny knights of the arena du boxe are wont to prepare for encounters. And he surely presided over the teapot. Among the guests were many of the gentler sex, and with the tea they devoured six huge cakes. So quickly was the supply exhausted that Mr. Carr forgot himself long enough to let slip, "Just like a pack of wolves."

Prior to the tea a squad of boxers entertained with exhibitions of their art. Ever Hammer, Adonis Andre Anderson, Joe Rivers, and other lesser lights contributeid their services.

RED SOX MARCH TO 5-3 VICTORY AT CLEVELAND

Cleveland, O., Sept. 23.—Boston triumphed over Cleveland again, 5 to 3. Mays was hit rather hard, but sensational catches by Lewis and Hooper cut off three Cleveland runs. Boston won by bunching hits off Lambeth and Morton in the second inning, scoring four runs on Lewis' triple, Scott's double, Thomas' single, a pass to Mays, Hooper's single, and Janvrin's sacrifice fly.

Lewis distinguished himself by sensational fielding and had a perfect day at the bat, making three singles and two triples in five times at bat. Score:

SENATORS, 6; TIGERS, 3.

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 23.—Washington won its first game here this season by defeating Detroit, 6 to 3. Three of the Senators' runs were made off James in the second inning. Jones, a recruit twirler from the Central association, pitched the rest of the game for Detroit. After holding Washington scoreless for five innings, he was found for three tallies. Heilman made a home run in the second, and Vitt's double in the ninth gave Detroit two more runs. Score:

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 23.—By winning today, 4 to 2, St. Louis made it nine victories out of nine games with Philadelphia here this season. The Browns won in the seventh when Hartley and Lavan singled and advanced on Groom's sacrifice. Haley threw wild to pick Hartley off third and Hartley scored, Lavan taking third. Shotton hit to R. Johnson and Lavan beat the throw to the plate. Grimm, who batted for Haley in the ninth, was presented with a diamond pin by local admirers. Score:

YANKS JOLT WHITE SOX IN 7-2 GAME; CUBS SPLIT WITH LEADING ROBINS

Tinkers Land First Clash, 3-1, but Lose Second in Seven Innings.

DODGERS LOSE GROUND

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—Manager Tinker of the Cubs realized at least a part of his great desire today when he got an even break in a double header against the pennant aspiring Robins, winning the first game, 3 to 1, and losing the second, 4 to 1. While he was turning the trick the Phillies won a double header, thereby gaining substantially on the local crowd.

If the Cubs had played the same brand of baseball in the second game that they did in the first there would have been a lot of sad people in Brooklyn tonight.

Rigler in Peculiar Light.

Not only did the Cubs lick the Robins but they licked the umpires also in the first combat. Mal Eason was behind the bat and Bill Rigler on the bases, and they were awful. Every one knows that Rigler has had a terrific row with Pat Moran, manager of the Phillies, this year, and nearly every one knows that Bill has done work as groundkeeper for Brooklyn. He boasted openly not long ago that he made $3,500 as groundkeeper last year, but whether that came from the Brooklyn club or not he didn't say.

It may be that he simply missed a play or two today, just as the best of umpires are bound to do at times. If it hadn't been for one of his awful decisions and another by his co-worker the Cubs probably would have knocked old Jack Coombs off the rubber and had four or five runs in the first part of the first game. Rigler called Art Wilson out at third base after Art had been lying there looking at the crowd for several seconds.

Eason Also Goes Wrong.

Later Eason called Max Flack out at the plate when the Cubs turned a beauty double steal, and Max hasn't been touched yet. Because of those decisions the score was tied, 1 to 1, when the eighth inning arrived. Then the Robins blew up in regular class D style and handed the game to Chicago. Not even an umpire could have saved it for them then.

In the second game the Cubs played just the opposite from their style of the first. They booted seven chances in the field and only seven innings were played because an approaching rain storm brought darkness and gave the umpire an excuse to call the game.

George McConnell was on the slab for the second game, but no pitcher could have kept a bold front with all the blunders being made. The only run made by the Robins without the aid of errors was the one in the seventh, after lamplight.

Cubs Use Three Hurlers.

McConnell was removed in the fifth and Mike Prendergast summoned to see if a change would do any good, and the first thing Mike did was to mess an easy ground ball. Later Gene Packard was on the slab, and the one earned run was scored off him.

A tremendous crowd was out. The regular Saturday throng and all their friends were present, making a total of at least 20,000 persons. The only time Brooklyn fans turn out is on Saturday, when they can see two games for the price of one ticket.

Notes

New York again today and tomorrow.

Two more games will end the season at Comiskey park.

In spite of the chilly weather and the gloomy outlook, there was a crowd of nearly 5,000 mourners.

Ness made a swell stop of a base hit from Pipp's bat in the second inning. Jack was taken out to let Fournier whiff for him in the sixth and Hasbrook finished on first.

Shawkey tried to catch Felsch off first in the sixth and the ball got away from Pipp, who looked all over the place for it, only to discover Felsch was calmly sitting on it. Hap then picked up the pill and threw it back to the pitcher.

The Sox made an unusual double play in the second. The bags were full when Magee flied to J. Collins far enough to score Baumann from third. The other runners tried to move up, but Ness cut in on Shano's throw in time to head off Shawkey at second base.

Notes

Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—Tomorrow is a day of rest, and then there'll be another double header against the Robins on Monday.

Rollie Zeider was spiked on the hoof by Jeff Pfeffer in the second game on a play that was meant to catch Jeff napping at third. The accident enabled Charley Pechous to get into the fight.

If it had remained light, Johnny Simmons, The Tribune amateur, might have hurled an inning in the second game. He and his pal, Al Hoffman, left for the ball park two hours before noon to practice up for a possible chance.

Vic Saier and Ole Olson nearly mixed in a fist fight in the first game when the latter slid into first base and came close to cutting a leg off Vic. Vaughn and Stengel were at the first base corner listening to the argument, when Stengel said something that aroused Vaughn's fighting blood, and Umpire Rigler had to step in between that pair.

Defeat Almost Assures Boston Pennant as Tex Russell Is Beaten.

PIPP POLES HOME RUN.

BY I. E. SANBORN.

All that was left of Chicago's pennant hopes after yesterday's defeat at the hands of the Yankees was the frappé fragment of a chance that a cyclone may wreck the Red Sox machine, which won its seventh straight game and put a gap of three and a half laps between itself and second place, to which the Rowlands still clung by a narrow margin. The score of the Yankee victory was 7 to 2.

To be sure, it still is possible for the White Sox to cop the six games left on their schedule, although their pitching staff looks so thoroughly demoralized that it is difficult to exercise the amount of imagination necessary to visualise that outcome. But even if that happened it would also be necessary for the Red Sox to lose five of their remaining nine combats to permit the Rowlands to tie them for the lead. And you all have a picture of the Carrigans losing five out of nine scraps, unless a miracle happens.

This Suspense Is Awful!

In spite of that outlook it will be several days at least before Boston actually can cinch its second consecutive American league championship, because of the additional distance to the finish of the schedule in the east, compared to the windup in the west, which is dated for a week from today. Just so long as the Red Sox have enough battles left to bring them back to their nearest contenders, in case of a continuous slump there will be no booking of world's series dates. Still, one might make one's hotel reservations in the Hub without being suspected of being crazy.

The Yankees triumphed yesterday by the slugging route, peeling off thirteen hits at the expense of three Sox hurlers. Moreover, they bunched the swats to good purpose, as a rule. The Rowlands, on the other hand, wasted a lot of the hits they made off Shawkey, only one of the eight cutting any figure in the run column.

Two Sox Hurlers Routed.

Tex Russell, Dave Danforth, and Joe Benz were the victims of the O'Donovan warclubs carried by the visitors. Russell got by in swell shape for two innings, then he was trounced for seven hits in the third and fourth rounds, netting a bunch of five tallies. That proved more than Shawkey needed, but the Yankees kept right on swatting Danforth. Two more runs were made against him, and one of them was a terrific drive by Walter Pipp which cleared the steel fence in the corner of right field on the fly.

Benz was successful in stopping the scoring in the last two rounds, but the Sox could not catch up. They counted only in the third spasm, and both their tallies were gifts by Shawkey, who committed three battery errors in that inning.

The counting began in the third when Baumann, Walters, and Shawkey singled, filling the bags with nobody out. Magee's fly scored Baumann, but resulted in doubling up Shawkey between first and second. A wild throw by McMullin gave Hendryx a life and let Walters register. Peck delivered a double which counted Hendryx.

Brief Spurt by Rowlands.

In the home half Russell was hit by a curve. J. Collins singled and McMullin walked, filling the bases with none down. A wild pitch let Russell home and the others moved up, so that J. Collins scored on an infield out. Although the Sox made at least one hit in every inning except two, they could not score again.

The Yanks counted twice in the fourth on Baker's double and singles by Miller and Walters, driving Russell to shelter. Pipp's home run was good for a count in the sixth. Hendryx's double and Peck's single scored the final tally in the seventh.

IMMANUEL NINE BEATS HOPE, 7-6, IN TITLE CLASH

Immanuel won the championship of the Lutheran Baseball Leauge of Cook County by nosing out Hope in a 7 to 6 battle at Weeghman park yesterday. Trailing by two runs when the eighth inning started, Hope mustered five solid hits behind a walk and apparently clinched the flag by scoring five runs. But Immanuel in its half of the same round went to the front again by counting four times on a pass and four blows. The scoring ended there.

Stoffiet drove in two runs for the victors, each time after two were out. A spectacular grab of a low line smash by Londelius was the fielding feature.

FOR PLAYERS OF WHIST

By A. R. Metcalfe

JONES had a nightmare. After a bad evening of bridge he dreamed that he held a wonderful hand, with ace, king, queen of every suit. Jones bid one no-trump, an opponent doubled, and Jones redoubled. Then the opponent led a green suit and took every trick.

When weak players are opposed to strong ones the former fare little better than Jones in his dream. But a run of ill luck is always blamed, and beautiful deals are played and lost without having their possibilities suspected. Take the following deal for an instance. The hands:

North:
S—Q, 10, 9, 6, 2.
H—A, Q, J, 10.
C—Q.
D—J, 9, 8.

West:
S—A, 5.
H—K, 6.
C—A, 9, 8, 6, 5, 4.
D—K, 7, 6.

East:
S—J, 7, 4.
H—9, 8, 5, 3, 2.
C—K, 7, 3.
D—A, Q.

South:
S—K, 8, 3.
H—7, 4.
C—J, 10, 2.
D—10, 5, 4, 3, 2.

Score, 0—0. West dealt and bid one no-trump, which closed the bidding. North had the opening lead.

THE PLAY.

Tricks.	N.	E.	S.	W.
1	6S	7S	KS	AS
2	QC	KC	2C	4C
3	D8	3C	10C	AC

11	9S	DA	D3	D7
12	HA	H8	H7	HK
13	10S	H9	D10	H6

West secured nine tricks and game.

No comment is needed, but below is the play when the north and south hands were given to two good players:

Tricks.	N.	E.	S.	W.
1	6S	7S	8S	5S
2	10S	4S	KS	AS
3	QC	KC	2C	4C
4	D8	3C	10C	AC

10	HA	H8	D3	HK
11	HQ	H9	D4	9C
12	HJ	DQ	D5	D7
13	DJ	DA	D10	DK

West secured four tricks only.

South properly finessed the spade at trick one, using the eleven rule, and at trick two, North gave a change-the-suit signal with the ten of spades.

West naturally tried to drop the adversaries' clubs in two rounds, and improperly continued the suit at trick five.

Had West read the situation perfectly he would have made the ace and queen of diamonds at tricks five and six, and then thrown the lead to North with the jack of spades, if possible. North would have refused to win the spade and taken the remaining tricks, but West would have reduced his loss to 50 points.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES.

Chicago.—[To the Editor.]—If a hand is double and the parties bidding make not only their bid but additional tricks as well, how much do they make above the line for fulfilling their contract to each trick over same? MRS. B. K. B.

Answer—Fifty points for making the contract and fifty points for each additional trick.

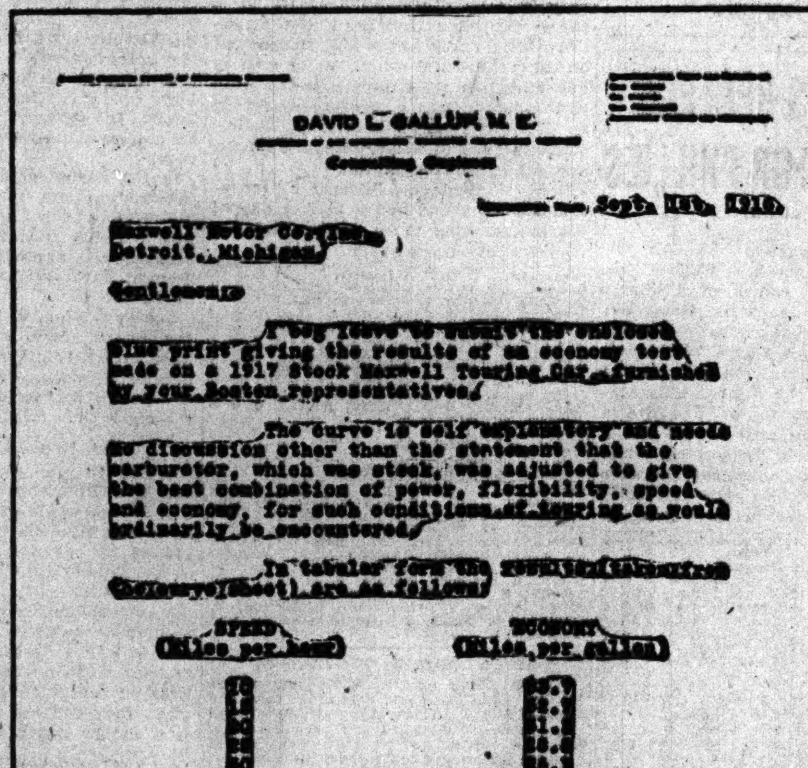
Scientific Proof of Maxwell Fuel Economy

In a test made by David L. Gallup, M. E., Professor of Gas Engineering, Worcester Polytechnic Institute, a stock Maxwell Touring Car made from 23 to 33.7 miles per gallon of gasoline at speeds ranging from 10 to 35 miles per hour. We reproduce a letter from Professor Gallup concerning this test.



DAVID L. GALLUP, M. E.
Consulting Engineer

[illegible], Sept. 1[illegible], 1916.

Maxwell Motor Corporation,
Detroit, Michigan.

Gentlemen:

I beg leave to submit the enclosed blue print giving the results of an economy test made on a 1917 Stock Maxwell Touring Car, furnished by your Boston representatives.

The curve is self explanatory and needs no discussion other than the statement that the carburetor, which was stock, was adjusted to give the best combination of power, flexibility, speed and economy, for such conditions of touring as would ordinarily be encountered.

In tabular form the results [illegible] are as follows:

SPEED (Miles per hour)	ECONOMY (Miles per gallon)
[illegible]	[illegible]

Respectfully submitted,

D. L. Gallup

Deferred Payments If Desired

NOTE that no unusual means were employed to get these results. The car used was taken from stock; the test was made with a full load and with top and windshield up; the regular Maxwell carburetor was used.

Any Maxwell car is capable of giving this same economy in gasoline consumption.

Maxwell operating economy matches its economy in first cost, making it The World's Greatest Motor Car Value.

Oakland SEDAN FOR ALL SEASONS

"The melancholy days are come,
The saddest of the year."

BRYANT'S immortal lines were typical of a time of the year when cold winter was making preparations to cover the earth with a mantle of snow.

The days had come when there must be a cessation of all outdoor joys—a'foot or a'wheel.

But to the man of to-day who will buy an Oakland Sedan the "melancholy days" will have no terrors.
No need for him to forego the joys and pleasures of motoring because of the change of seasons.

An all-weather car. Open in summer, closed in winter, and instantly and easily converted from one to the other—two cars in one—a union of utility and luxury for the occupants.

The Oakland Sedan is mounted on the Six Chassis—that Oakland "Six" which has found such universal favor with motorists everywhere.

We will be able to make prompt deliveries of this Oakland Sedan to those who are equally prompt in placing their orders.

The Oakland 7 passenger Touring "Eights" at $1585, and the 3 and 5 passenger "Sixes" at $795, are two gentle giants with high-power motors, both of which have shown themselves equal in any emergency to render faithful performances, with an unusual submission to control and with an economy in operation so marked that we are in position to guarantee mileage both as to fuel consumption and tires.

All models—Sedan "Six," Touring "Six" and Touring "Eight"—await your careful and leisurely inspection at our salesrooms.

BY OTTO A. ENGEL.

After battling without result during two quarters, Oak Park High, assisted by errors of the opposition, defeated Senn heavyweights in the feature game of the double header at Oak Park yesterday, 19 to 0. AGAR AND O'CONNOR HURT IN GRID DRILL

THE football jinx which has played havoc with Maroon gridiron hopes for the last few years, got an early start when two promising back field men, one a holdover "C" winner from Stagg's 1915 "pony" back field, received injuries which may keep both out of play for part of the season at least. The men are Jack Agar, varsity half back, and Alfred O'Connor, full back, who took part in some varsity contests.

Agar sustained a badly wrenched shoulder when he was tackled with the ball, falling on the point of the shoulder. O'Conner had his knee sprained, also from being tackled. Agar worked out with his mates in uniform after his injury, but could not take an active part, and O'Connor, who is a law school student who finishes his eligibility period in December, has had to confine his activities to moral support as he limped along studying the plays from the sidelines.

SCRIMMAGE HANDED TO PURPLE PLAYERS; M'DEVITT REPORTS

The Northwestern university football squad, twenty-one strong, engaged in practice on Northwestern field yesterday. The early period was given over to punting, tackling, and passing the ball. Kicking goals from the field and signal practice followed. Then Coach Fred J. Murphy divided his men into squads and wound up the day with a stiff forty-five minutes scrimmage.

The hopes of the Purple for a crack team this season soared another notch when two new aspirants appeared. They were Mulder, who two years ago starred on the Evanston academy eleven and last year played on the Purple varsity squad, and Lynch, a member of the last year varsity team. Both are line men.

Elmer McDevitt, line coach and former Yale star, was on the field for the first time. His appearance considerably encouraged the men. McDevitt has been on the border with the Minnesota troops.

MORGAN PARK LOOKS STRONG

The Morgan Park preparatory schools had their first football practice yesterday. The largest squad for years reported for drill. The first tryout will take place with the alumni next Saturday. LOOMIS IN ONE LEAP WINS HIGH JUMP BY BOUNDING 6 FT. 3 IN.

New York, Sept. 23.—[Special.]—Jo G. Loomis of the Chicago A. A., the lanky, raw boned middle westerner, who formerly held the national championship in the high jump and 100 yard dash, performed a feat unparalleled in athletic history at the annual fall games of the New York A. C. at Travers island this afternoon.

Coming from the dressing room late, Loomis appeared on the field when the bar in the running high jump had been raised to 6 feet 3 inches. Carefully measuring his distance from the takeoff, he swung through the runway, and with a mighty bound leaped cleanly over the crosspiece.

First and Only Leap.

It was his first jump of the day, and his last, for it won the event, as neither Emil Loescher nor De Loss Walker of the N. Y. A. C. was able to follow the westerner over the bar. Never before has an athlete cleared such a height as Loomis did today on his first attempt. Loescher and Walker tied at 6 feet 2 inches.

Fred Murray, unattached, of San Francisco made a world's record in the 120 yard hurdle event with ten three foot hurdles. His time, :14 2-5, was 3 4-5 seconds better than the record of George Taylor, made in 1883.

Pentathlon to Kelly.

The national pentathlon was won by Fred Kelly of Los Angeles, who finished first in the broad jump, javelin throw, and in one of the 200 meter runs. Patrick O'Connor of the Irish-American A. C., New York, and Daniel Shea of the Pastime A. C., New York, finished second and third respectively.

The two mile steeplechase was won by Michael Devanney of the Millrose A. C., New York, in 10:48. J. W. Overton and W. J. Kennedy of Chicago were second and third respectively.

MISS STIRLING WINS GOLF PRIZE COMBAT FROM TITLE HOLDER

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 23.—Miss Alexa Stirling of Atlanta, Ga., holder of the southern golf championship, today defeated Mrs. Clarence H. The southern champion, who had played consistent golf throughout the tournament, could not match the play of the national champion in the outward journey and in consequence was 2 down at the turn. Coming home, however, she overtook Mrs. Vanderbeck, went into the lead, and won. The cards:

PILOT HURT IN AUTO TRIAL.

Duquoin, Ill., Sept. 23.—Cornie Parker, a young auto racer of Duquoin, was badly injured while tuning up for the annual auto races at the Perry county fair, but it is thought he will recover without permanent ill effects. Parker was speeding around the track about forty-five miles an hour when he accidentally crashed into another racer. Parker suffered a fractured leg and may be hurt internally. His mechanician, Clarence Wilson, was slightly injured, as was Amos Drew, another racer on the track at the time.

THREE SYSTEMS CLASH IN HOT PENNANT RACE

Boston Stone Wall and Tigers' Dashing Attack Against Erratic Sox.

ALL HAVE A CHANCE.

BY I. E. SANBORN.

Three different systems of management as varied as baseball will permit are exemplified by the three contenders for the American league championship in this phenomenal year of 1916.

In Detroit, Jennings, the oldest of the three prominent leaders of the season, has been noted over a period of years for a strong offense which has been developed at the expense of his defense. Carrigan of the Red Sox has placed his reliance chiefly on a stalwart defense to hold down the opposing team so that a less brilliant attack would net enough runs to win. Rowland of the White Sox, possessing great mechanical strength, has been unable to develop either a defense or an offense that was consistent, consequently has been compelled to vary his system from day to day according to the strength or weakness of his defense.

Tigers Have Fast Attack.

A pitching staff is the important factor in a team's defense, although the best pitcher in the world cannot produce results without support that is at least dependable, and a brilliant array of fielders can make a mediocre slab man look good to the fans. Batting is the backbone of an offense, but it is only that. There must be arms and legs to make a backbone of any service to mankind, and there must be means of converting hits into runs to make batting of much value to a ball team.

For years Jennings has produced a team capable of making a lot of runs, and it has had to make them in order to win, because the Tigers have been notable for lack of airtight pitching.

The Jennings system of crowding all speed into the attack and taking long chances has been quite uniformly successful because the Tiger pilot has had in Ty Cobb the greatest living runmaker and rungetter. By building his attack around Cobb and Crawford he was able to produce sufficient tallies to beat an opponent if his defense had average success in holding said opposition to low scores.

Successful in Long Run.

This system proved successful in the long marathon of a championship race, involving the playing of 154 games, for three years in a row in 1907, 1908, and 1909, but it fell down hard by comparison with other systems when it came to the short sprintlike tests of a world's series. In the first two years of Detroit's unquestioned supremacy in the American league the Jennings attack never had a chance to get started in the world's series against Chicago's Cubs. Pitching is such a determining factor in post-season combats that the Tigers were outclassed in every big series except that of 1909, and then they failed in the stress of the final game.

Red Sox Safe and Sure.

Since Carrigan took control of the Red Sox they have been more remarkable defensively than otherwise. With a quartet of reliable and consistent slabmen, backed up by a wonderful outfield trio and a steady, fast infield, Carrigan has had to devote only enough attention to the attack to insure a few runs each day in order to win the majority of the games. His system last year was of the safe and sure kind. The Red Sox had the batting strength and the baseball sense to make the most of their opportunities without resorting to tactics that were out of the ordinary or fraught with risk.

In the world's series of last fall there was no question in the mind of any fair minded critic that the Red Sox outclassed the Phillies in every department of the game, except possibly, with Alexander the Great on the slab, as Carrigan had no individual slabman who stood out as preëminently above his environment as Moran's star did.

Sticks to Airtight Game.

If Carrigan had started to force matters and had played a rushing game against Philadelphia the Red Sox probably would have won their victories by larger margins. Instead, the Hub manager kept his team playing airtight baseball both offensively and defensively. He was satisfied with one run, where he might have made perhaps half a dozen by taking chances. He apparently knew his system would win and was satisfied with close scores, instead of risking an upset by taking longer chances.

At the start of this year, with a pitching staff that was not in top form, the Carrigan system broke down, and for quite a spell the Red Sox were out of the contending class in the pennant race. But as his slabmen rounded into condition to do their former work the Carrigans immediately began to climb, until they attained the lead. Many doubt if they could have been made to surrender that lead if injuries, which robbed the infield of Barry and Gardner simultaneously, had not impaired the defensive strength of the outfit.

Rowland has had in the White Sox a team that is acknowledged to be superior to anything in either major league from a mechanical standpoint, ever since the middle of last season. He fell heir to what was left of a magnificent pitching staff, for which the White Sox have been renowned for a decade.

The loss of Walsh's services naturally cut a large chunk out of the Comiskey club staff, largely because of Big Ed's consistency. What was left and what has been added to the Sox pitching staff was more brilliant than reliable under any and all circumstances. Certain men could wipe up the ground with some teams, but were easy marks for others.

In their attack the White Sox have been mechanically strong—able to make a lot of base hits and roll up good batting averages taken as a whole. But in the matter of converting base hits into runs the Rowlands have been inconsistent all season. They have hit streaks when they were invincible and could trim all comers, only to fall into other streaks in which they could not win half their games.

White Hose Not Dependable.

The result is that Rowland has not been able to perfect any regular system of play, partly because he could not depend on his defense being anywhere near the same standard from day to day, and partly because of marked inequalities in the makeup and abilities of his material in the offense.

The White Sox cannot play the safe and sane game at bat because so many of them cannot advance base runners except by the base hit route. They cannot play the runaway game on the bases because too many of the batsmen cannot be relied on to protect the base runners. The result has been something that was "neither fish, fowl, nor good red herring."

INQUISITIVE FANS

Elmwood, Ill.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—With a man on third and a man on second, the batter hits the ball to the infield. Man on third starts home, man on second starts to third. Ball is fielded to catcher, who stands on home plate. Man from third stops and walks home. Man on second reaches third before man gets home. Catcher throws to second, not touching man from third, trying to get man who hit the ball. Does the run count? Can the man go back from third to second after reaching third? J. L. G.

Certainly, the run counted. Read rule 59. Any of the runners could go back.

Danville, Ill.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—1. The pitcher puts his foot on the pitcher's plate and takes his signal from the catcher, with a man on first base. He starts to deliver the ball to the catcher and in doing so he throws to first base. The runner starts to steal second and is caught between bases. The home club claims "balk." Umpire is undecided. The pitcher faced the batter and threw while he was facing the batter. 2. Should a balk be called on a pitcher when he winds up to deliver the ball to the batter? D. J. W.

1. Sounds like a balk, but would have to see it to decide definitely. 2. It always is a balk if the pitcher delivers the ball without having one of his feet on the slab.

J. A. S., Gary, Ind.—Do not know.

A. P. Izard, Chicago.—Ervin Lange did not pitch for the White Sox. The White Sox pitcher's name was Frank Lange.

W. A. Fields, Chicago.—The date was Aug. 27, 1911, but we have lost our calendar for that year.

Rock Island, Ill.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—1. Base runner cuts third base and reaches home. While touching home he is tagged by the catcher, but the ball also is thrown back to third and the runner called out. Who gets the putout, the catcher for tagging the runner or the third baseman for tagging the base? 2. Is the umpire supposed to notify the opposing player to throw the ball back to a base so the umpire can call a man out for cutting a base if only the umpire saw the same? BYRON.

1. The catcher made the putout as it was not necessary to throw the ball to third after the runner was touched at the plate. Not having touched third, he could not be safe at home. 2. The umpire cannot call attention to a player cutting a base, but must wait for the team in the field to claim the decision.

W. C. Hofman, Chicago.—White, Walsh, and Smith. It was in 1908.

A. M. Schaefer, Wilmette, Ill.—The Tribune does not decide bets.

SHAY NO LONGER MANAGER; PHELAN BOSSES THE KAWS.

Danny Shay has been "excused" as manager of the Kansas City club. This announcement was made yesterday by Owner George Tebeau at his home in Riverside. Art Phelan will run the team the balance of the season.

Shay's poor health was given by Tebeau as a reason for his dismissal. Shay's contract as manager runs to the end of this season, and Tebeau said he would continue to draw salary, although relieved of his duties.

Plenty to Say Later.

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 23.—Danny Shay would not express himself concerning his dismissal as manager.

"Later on I'll say plenty," Shay declared. "It looks like they're trying to make me the fall guy."

Shay came to Kansas City as manager of the Blues in July, 1909. He managed it also in 1910 and 1911, finishing second the latter year. Shay returned to the management last year.

KENOSHA NINE TIES GIANTS.

Kenosha, Wis., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—The Jefferys of this city and Chicago American Giants battled to a 2 to 2 tie in twelve innings today. The Negro team batted in its runs in the eighth, but the locals kept the pace by forcing over the tying brace of tallies the latter half of the same rounds. The locals were outhit, but fielded well, and the Fosters' defensive play also cut off threatened scores. Score:

CINCINNATI NINE SURVIVES.

Cincinnati, O., Sept. 23.—The Norwoods of this city swamped the Trolley Dodgers of Birmingham, Ala., 10 to 3, in the first game of the semi-finals of the semi-professional championship series of the National Baseball federation. The southerners could do little with White of the Norwoods, while the locals found Loveless easy. Score:

Birmingham ...0 0 0 1 1 0 0 1 0—3 9 5
Cincinnati ....3 0 4 0 4 0 0 0 [illegible]—10 11 1

Batteries—Loveless and Carter; White and [illegible].

Cleveland Wins Amateur Clash.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 23.—The P. J. Sullivan team of Pittsburgh today was eliminated from the amateur baseball championship series when it was defeated by the May team of Cleveland, 9 to 7. Score:

SEXTON LOSES IN GOLF PLAY

THE DIARY OF A SIREN.

SEPT. 19.

Dick and I are going flat hunting tomorrow and I am so excited. I wonder if every girl feels the same thrills over picking out their own home. Of course we will have to get an inexpensive apartment as Dick's present salary is only $75 per month, but he expects an increase the first of the year. I know he will want to rent an apartment that is beyond our means as he wants me to have everything the best, but I will insist on him taking an inexpensive one as it would not be fair to put too much burden on him when we are just starting out. And besides I will be so happy with him that it will make little difference if we live in a palace or a hovel.

FLATS FOR RENT

He has just phoned me. The dear boy only wanted to know what kind of flowers I liked so he could bring me some when he comes out tonight.

"Dick," I said, "you mustn't be so extravagant. I will be just as glad to see you if you bring yourself and no flowers."

"But how about a few carnations?" he inquired.

"Well, Dick, if you insist," I said. "I would rather have orchids than any other flower. But please don't be extravagant and get too many."

I hope the dear foolish boy doesn't bring any at all and not more than a dozen at most. We must learn to economize, he and I.

SEPT. 21.

Dick and I have picked out our apartment and it is too sweet for anything. It is four rooms and a front porch at Prairie Ave. and 60th. Street, first floor, and we are getting it at $40 per month, which is a real bargain.

The real estate man said he would hold it for us until the first of November if we would sign a year's lease. And now it looks like we would be married the last week in October, though I will be rushed to death to get ready in time. I wish I could afford to give up my position in Mr. Weeghman's office, but I can make good use of the money I make there and will stay until a week or two before the wedding.

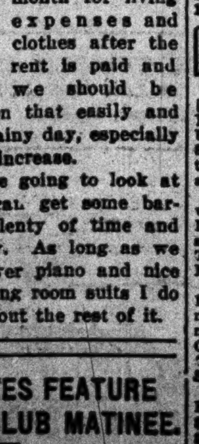
Dick came out yesterday forenoon with several clippings from the papers with different flats that were for rent.

"We must look at the ones we think will be least expensive," said I.

So he picked out one that he thought would be just right for us. It was four rooms over on Wabash near 57th. St. They wanted $20 per month for it, but when I had looked at it I saw it was not worth that money.

"It is a good thing I am with you," I told Dick. "I believe I am more practical than you and you will have to let me be the business manager."

So we looked at several more on Wabash and Indiana and I believe dear foolish Dick would have taken anything they showed us, but I would not allow him to be imposed on. The apartment we finally chose was not on his list, but we saw the for rent sign in the window as we passed by it.



On Dick's salary, that will leave us $35 per month for living expenses and clothes after the rent is paid and we should be able to get along on that easily and put some by for a rainy day, especially after Dick gets his increase.

Next week we are going to look at furniture and we can get some bargains if we take plenty of time and look round carefully. As long as we can get a good player piano and nice living room and dining room suits I do not care so much about the rest of it.

CLEVELAND AMATEURS WIN.

STAR HAWK WINS LOUISVILLE CUP BY SCANT LENGTH

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 23.—Star Hawk the English bred three year old colt owned by A. K. Maccomber, the California millionaire and trained by W. B. Jennings, carrying 120 pounds, won the fourth renewal of the Louisville cup, the feature of the fall meeting at Douglas Park, here this afternoon by a scant length.

Embroidery finished second, five lengths ahead of Kilanna and Waterwitch, the only other starter, trailing the field, four lengths in the rear. The time for the two miles, 3:29 3-5, was 3 3-5 seconds slower than the track record for that distance.

Off to Good Start.

The four horses to face the barrier got off to a good start, with Star Hawk slightly in the lead. The colt held this advantage until the mile and a half, when Embroidery, running third, came up with a rush and took the lead, holding it until the turn into the stretch was reached. Here Jockey H. H. Phillips urged Star Hawk forward, and after a rousing stretch drive, managed to finish ahead of his field.

The race was worth $2,200 to the winner, in addition to a handsome trophy. Summaries:

GUNBOAT SMITH POUNDS COFFEY IN QUAKER BOUT

"TRIBUNE" DECISIONS

At Philadelphia—Gunboat Smith beat Jim Coffey (6).

At Pittsburgh—Al Grayler beat Knockout Brown (6).

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—Gunboat Smith left the ring at the National Athletic club tonight the victor over Jim Coffey, the Rosscommon giant. In both the second and third rounds it looked as if the big Irishman had reached the jumping off place. In the second Smith switched over a right flush to the jaw that made Coffey scurry hurriedly into a clinch, and in the fourth another well directed right to the point of the jaw made the Irishman sway like a reed in the breeze. Coffey emerged from this round with a badly swollen left eye and blood trickling from his mouth.

In the closing round Coffey let loose with full force with his right. It was the hardest swing that the Irishman let fly, but it failed to do its work, as it caught Smith on the body as he was backing away.

Terry McGovern gave Frankie White a thorough going over in the semi-windup. Jimmy Martin won from Young Jack Walters. Frankie O'Neil defeated Eddie Rando, and Charlie Walters was returned the victor over Frankie Howell.

W. ZBYSZKO VS. STECHER.

Wladek Zbyszko, Polish heavyweight, has been signed to meet Joe Stecher at Comiskey park on Oct. 1. The bout will feature the field day of the Irish councils of Chicago for the widows and orphans of the rebels who died in the Irish rebellion. Five wrestling bouts will be staged and Chick Evans will endeavor to drive the ball over the centerfield score board from home plate, making one shot with his driver, the other with a midiron. A ten mile marathon is also booked.

COAST STARS END SEASON; GIVE RACQUETS TO BOYS.

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 23.—Ball boys became richer by several aristocratic tennis racquets today, when, at the conclusion of play in exhibition matches between the Californians, William Johnston, Clarence Griffin, Roland Roberts, and Willis Davis, and local players, the visitors heaved their sticks over the backstop and declared they were through for the season. Johnston defeated Griffin, his national doubles partner, 6—0, 6—0. Then he and Griffin broke even with Davis and Roberts in a two set match, 2—6, 6—4.

FEATURE MATCH TO FORSTER

First round matches were played in the open tennis tournament at Snal Social center yesterday, H. Forster winning the feature contest from B. Nath by his steady play, 6—4, 5—7, 7—5. Sixty are entered for the singles and doubles and most of the preliminary rounds are to be played off today. Results:

First round of singles—L. Smith beat McCaffrey, 6—1, 6—1; Stern beat S. Simon, 6—3, 6—1; Alter beat Kish, 6—3, 3—6, 6—4; Bushong beat Agay, 6—3, 6—4; J. Cohen beat A. Semanes, 6—2, 6—1; Forster beat Nath, 6—4, 5—7, 7—5; Buchbinder beat Behmeyer, 6—2, 6—0; Maser beat Engel, 6—2, 6—3; Fogleson beat Fass, 6—4, 6—4; Littman beat C. Cohn, 6—3, 6—3; Gates beat Williams, 6—3, 6—2.

PAYS $1,000 FOR GOLF SOD.

New York, Sept. 23.—The Field and Marine club of Brooklyn has just paid $1,000, believed to be a record price, for the sod from five putting greens of the Dyker Meadow Golf club of that borough. Ordinarily it requires years to obtain good putting greens, the turf of which must be carefully grown. Workmen are transferring the newly purchased greens from the old course to the new one.

WHITE DEFEAT IN TITLE BOUT TOLD BY STARS

Colorado Seer Predicted Result Before Welsh Won from Charley.

BY RAY C. PEARSON.

Out in Colorado Springs, where the gentle affair between Freddie Welsh, world's champion lightweight, and Charley White of Chicago was staged on Labor day, there is a man whose main hobby is studying the planets and the effects they have on things on this old earth. This man's name is J. L. Schaefer, and when he isn't busy at his hobby he is mixing up in the real estate business. So interested is he in the planetary business that he is trying to interest a number of wealthy Coloradoans in a scheme to build a huge observatory on Cheyenne mountain.

It is necessary to tell this much about Mr. Schaefer before getting down to the interesting part of the yarn. Mr. Schaefer is not a young man. His hair is white and perhaps he is 60 years of age. On Labor day at 12:30 o'clock the writer, walking along Tejon street accompanied by one of the members of the Million Dollar club, which staged the Welsh-White bout, met Mr. Schaefer. After the usual introduction Mr. Schaefer called us to one side and allowed that he had something to tell. So we stepped into an office.

Translation for Scribe.

As soon as we were seated the Coloradoan opened his pocketbook and brought out a little piece of yellow paper on which he had written a lot of dope, much of it being in hieroglyphics which were Greek to the writer. He gave it to us to read, but not being able to decipher the meaning of all that had been written, we handed it back for translation. We listened politely to the translation, and when the recital was finished we weren't terribly excited about what we had heard. Here are some of the main points of the translation:

Freddie Welsh was born on March [illegible] 1886. Sept. 4, fine weather is [illegible] and particularly good for Welsh [illegible] fitfully under heavy pressure and is [illegible] to the core.

Charley White was born March [illegible]. Sept. 4 evil for White. White [illegible] to obstacles. White stronger than Welsh and also game, but not so resourceful or quick to think out things. White's [illegible] warlike.

Sees Bad Day for White.

After these pointers had been given Mr. Schaefer went a little more into detail to tell what his astronomy study had revealed.

"The position of other planets [illegible] at the time of the birth of these young men shows me that it is an evil day," said Mr. Schaefer. "I believe there will be a serious accident of some sort, and I also believe that White will suffer from unfairness, for it is an evil day for him."

It was nearly an hour after we had parted company with Mr. Schaefer that the south bleachers of the arena on Huerfano street collapsed, carrying with it 1,200 fans, 200 of whom were badly injured, one of them dying several days later. And while all this was happening the man who had predicted a serious accident was taking a midday nap at the Colorado Springs club.

Never Had Seen Fight.

Then came the fight and the demonstration of the fans who tried to mob Referee Billy Roche after he had given his decision in favor of Welsh. There are many who saw the contest who never will believe that Roche's decision was fair. So the dope handed out by this Schaefer person seems to have gone through to the letter.

But there is another point that should be recalled in connection with this prediction. Mr. Schaefer never saw a boxing contest in his life, he said, and he never had the pleasure of meeting either the lightweight champion or White outside the ring.

Strange how accurately he picked the scrap, wasn't it?

BROWN LOSES TO GRAYBER IN FIVE OF SIX ROUNDS.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 23.—[Special.]—Al Grayber outboxed George Knockout Brown of Chicago tonight in a six round bout. Brown won only one round, the fourth, when one of his numerous wild swings caught Grayber in the stomach. The third round was even and the remainder went to Grayber. Grayber beat the Greek to the punch in every round. Brown did nothing but swing both hands wildly and Grayber always waited and planted well directed left jabs to the Chicago boy's face.

WELSH GIVEN SHORT BOUT, BUT DECISION ROILS FANS.

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 23.—Freddie Welsh, world's lightweight champion, last night was given the decision at the end of a four round bout with Harry Anderson of Seattle, [illegible] champion. The decision apparently was unpopular with the spectators, who shouted that Anderson was entitled to a draw. Welsh easily won the first two rounds, but in the last two Anderson closed in and exchanged blows with the champion frequently, bringing the crowd to its feet by a whirlwind finish.

HOWARD SLAMS FULTON.

Charges that Fred Fulton, the Rochester, Minn., heavyweight, had deliberately crawled out of his proposed match with Andre Anderson, which was to have been decided before an Eau Claire club, were made last night by [illegible] Howard, manager of the Chicagoan. Howard asserted that he would not consider another match with Fulton unless a substantial sidebet is made.

A Mother's Appreciation

Just a few lines to thank you for my little son's Moving Picture Machine that he received in perfect order and everything as you stated. HETTY SORREL

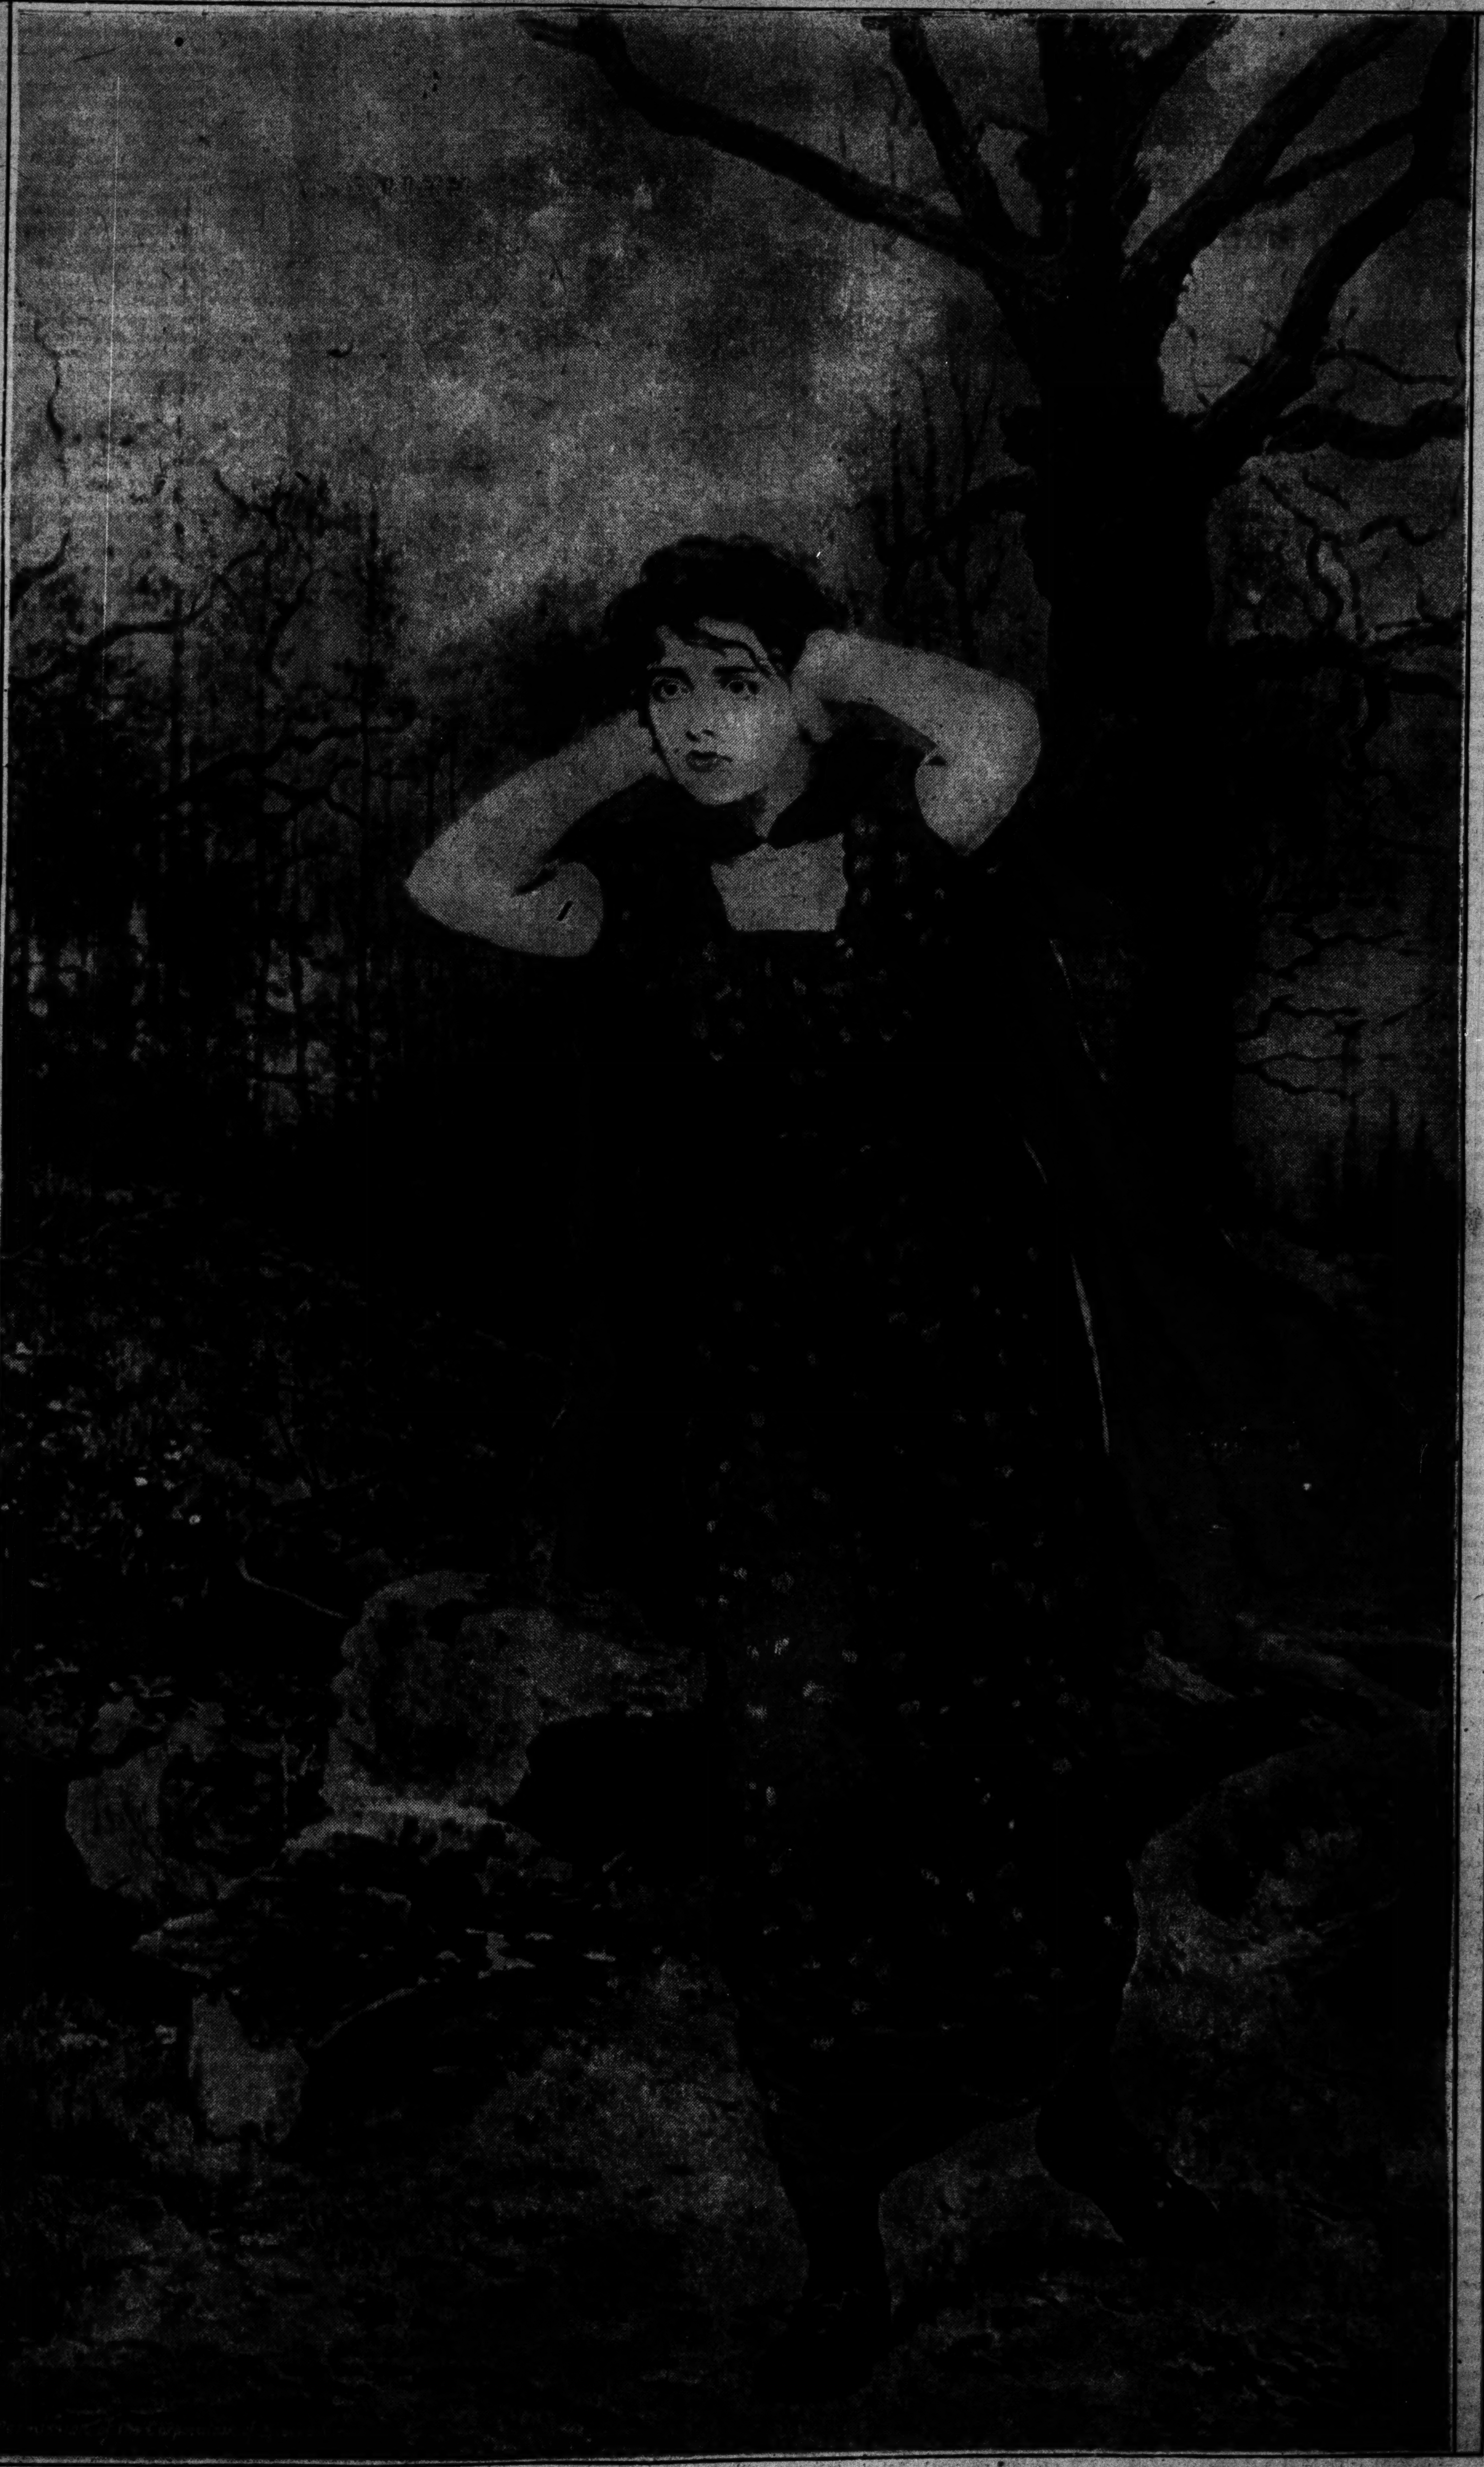
REPRODUCTION OF A PAINTING BY JOHN COLLIER



Every week The Sunday Tribune will reproduce in four colors on this page one of the world's most famously beautiful paintings. There will be a brief biography of the painter and a story of the painting. Herewith is reproduced another in the series.

Hetty Sorrel. From the picture by the Hon. John Collier, R. I., in the Blackburn art gallery. Size, 55x33 inches. Presented to the corporation of Blackburn by A. C. Bowdler, Esq., J. P. (1850——).

BY LOUISE JAMES BARGELT.

"I WALKED and I walked—and finally I came to a place where there was lots of chips and turf and I sat down by the side of a trunk of a tree to think what I should do. And then all of a sudden I saw a hole under the nut tree like a little grave. And it darted into me like lightning—I'd lay the baby there and cover it with grass and the chips. I couldn't kill it any other way. And I'd done it in a minute and O, it cried so—I couldn't quite cover it up—and I thought that perhaps somebody would come and take care of it and then it wouldn't die.

"And I made haste out of the wood, but I could hear it crying all the while and when I got into the fields it was as if I was held fast, and I couldn't go away for all I wanted so to go. But I kept on till I came to a roadside by a barn and I thought I could go in there and hide myself among the hay and straw. I made myself a bed ever so far behind, where nobody could see me, and I was so tired and weak I went to sleep. But the baby's crying kept waking me, and when I got up and went out of the barn I didn't know whether it was night or morning. But it was morning, for it kept getting lighter, and I turned back the way I had come—I couldn't help it—the baby's crying made me go—but I was frightened to death.

"I knew the way to the place. I could hear it crying at every step. I don't know what I felt. I don't know whether I was frightened or glad. I don't know what I felt till I saw that the baby was gone. I was struck like a stone with fear. I never thought of stirring, I was that weak. I knew I couldn't run away, and everybody that saw me would know about the baby. My heart went like a stone. I couldn't wi or try for anything. It seemed like I should be there forever and nothing would ever, ever change. And then they came and took me away."

Collier painted emotions with the same delight that a psychologist analyzes them, a writer describes them, and an actor lives them. The tenser the situation the more vigor and enthusiasm he put into the picture. The long list of paintings which bear his name show the strength of his predilection for the emotional in art. "The Sinner," "Evil," "The Fallen Idol," "The Confession," and "Marriage de Convenance," are ranked as his strongest, while the "Prodigal Daughter" is perhaps the finest example of his remarkable lamplight effects.

In "Hetty Sorrel" he has charged his picture with great dramatic feeling. He has imagined graphically the distracted Hetty of George Eliot's "Adam Bede" flying from the scene of her crime. Always daring in his color schemes, he has given for a background to her black despair all the glory and gorgeousness of an autumn afternoon.

He has idealized neither her beauty nor her character. He has made her what she was, bewitchingly pretty in her youthful freshness, but pitifully vain, pleasure loving, and weak. Easily betrayed by flattery, she turns a deaf ear to the honest love of Adam and falls victim to the passing passion of Donnithorne.

Then, beside herself with terror at the living result of her folly, she resorts to the maddest of measures for self-protection. She buries the child in the wood that it may die quickly. Undiscovered, she thinks, she can marry Adam Bede, to whom she has at last engaged herself.

But horror consumes her at what she had done and she cannot stay away from the grave in the wood. The inevitable happens. The child is found dead and Hetty is caught and brought to speedy trial. Adam tries in vain to save her. She is condemned to be hanged. At the moment that she is taken to the scaffold, trembling, dumb with fright, Donnithorne comes with the pardon. Not a full pardon, just a commutation of the death sentence to the almost as dreadful one of transportation to a strange land, away from all friends and loved ones.

Donnithorne enters the army by way of attempted atonement and Adam marries the gentle and devout Diana, who has always loved him.

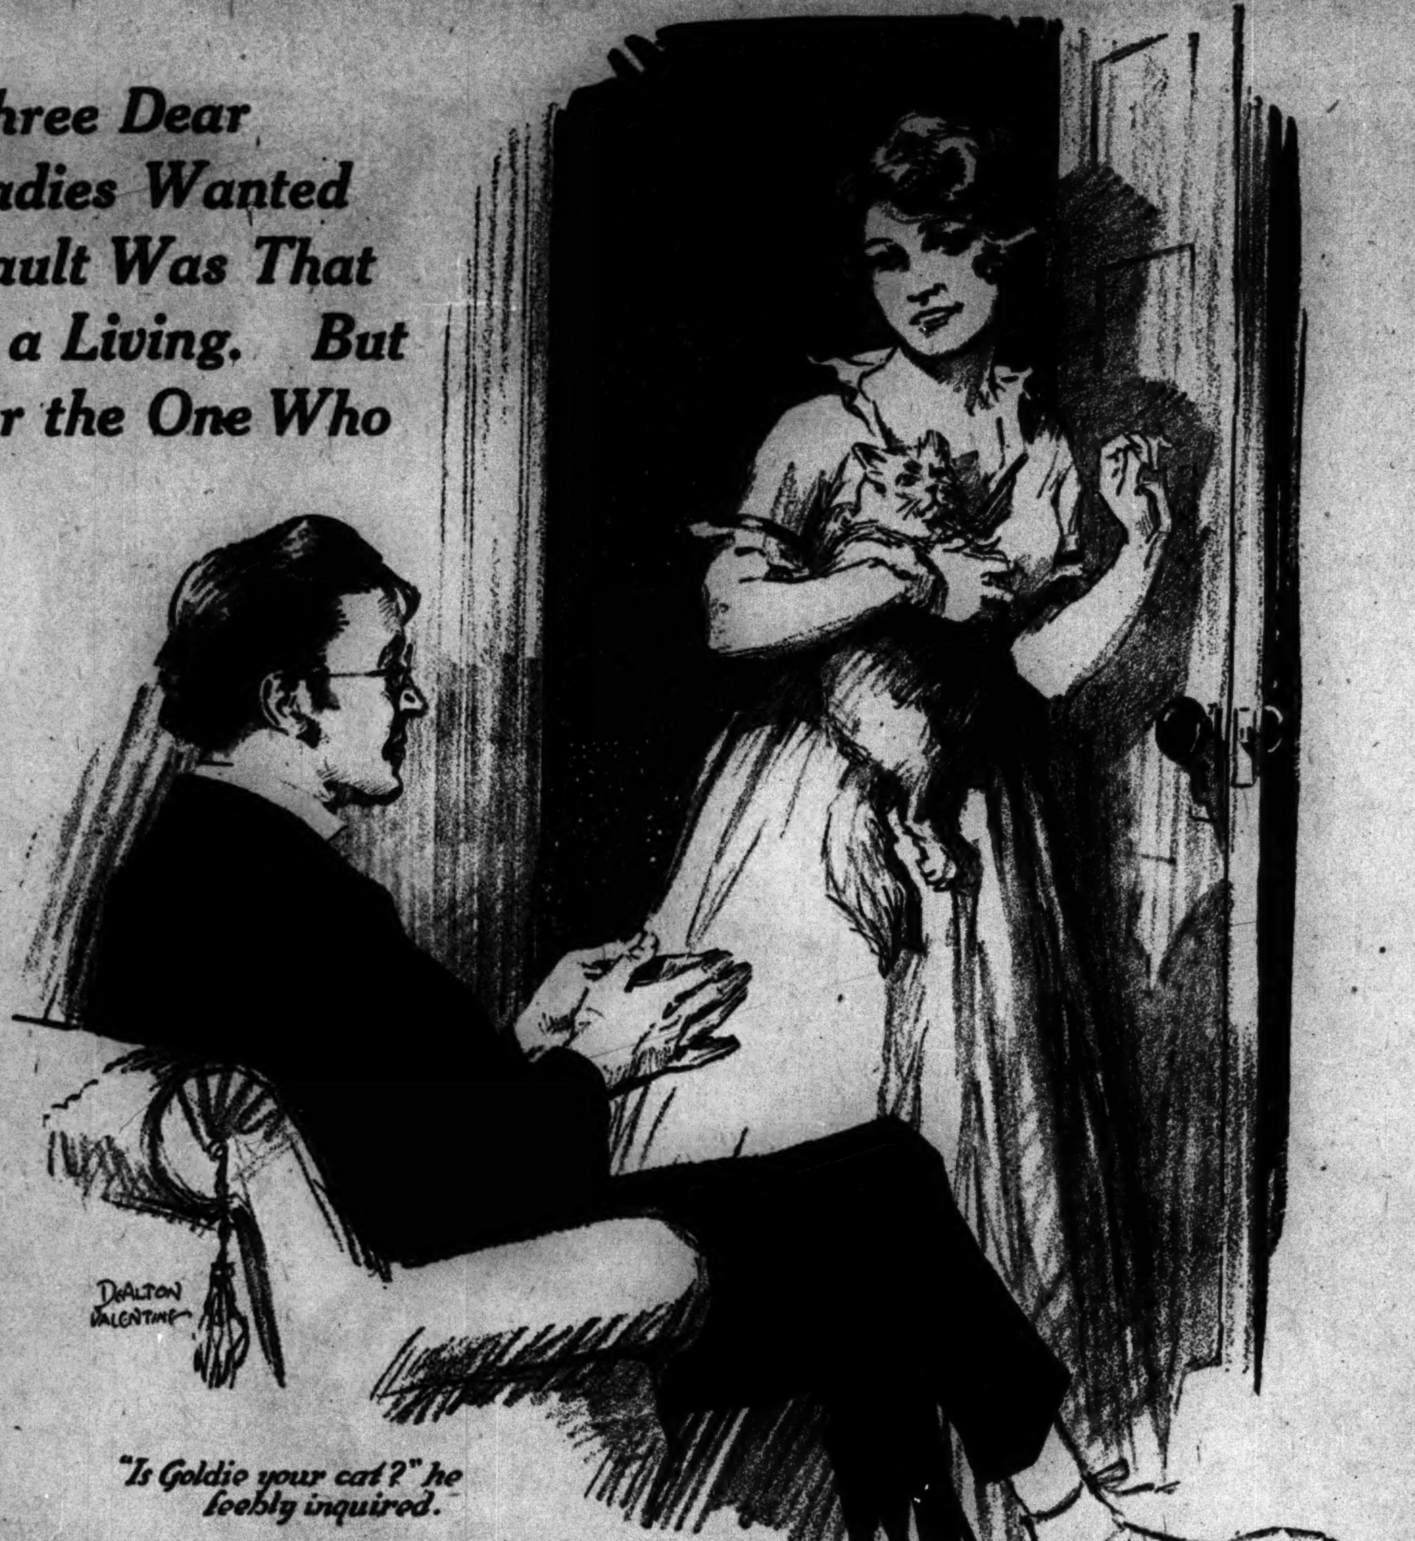
Collier is best known in England through his portrait work. His pictures of Kipling, of Maurice Hewlett, and of Prof. Huxley are all illustrative of his power in portrait work.

His residence at the present time is in London.

Another famous painting will be reproduced next Sunday.

The CAT AND CUPID by Arnold Bennett

Three Dear Ladies Wanted Him. His One Fault Was That He Couldn't Earn a Living. But That Didn't Bother the One Who Got Him.



"Is Goldie your cat?" he feebly inquired.

THE secret history of the Ebag marriage is now printed for the first time. The Ebag family (who prefer their name to be accented on the first syllable) once almost ruled Oldcastle, which is a clean and conceited burg, with long historical traditions, on the very edge of the industrial, democratic, and unclean Five Towns. The Ebag family still lives in the grateful memory of Oldcastle, for no family ever did more to preserve the celebrated Oldcastilian superiority in social, moral and religious matters over the vulgar Five Towns.

The episodes leading to the Ebag marriage could only have happened in Oldcastle. By which I mean merely that they could not have happened in any of the Five Towns. In the Five Towns that sort of thing does not occur. I don't know why, but it doesn't. The people are too deeply interested in football, starting prices, rates, public parks, sliding scales, excursions to Blackpool, and municipal shindies, to concern themselves with organists as such. In the Five Towns an organist may be a sanitary inspector or an auctioneer on Mondays. In Oldcastle an organist is an organist, recognized as such in the streets. No one ever heard of an organist in the Five Towns being taken up and petted by a couple of old ladies. But this may occur at Oldcastle. It, in fact, did.

The scandalous circumstances which led to the disappearance from the Oldcastle scene of Mr. Skerritt, the original organist of St Placid, have no relation to the present narrative, which opens when the ladies Ebag began to seek for a new organist. The new church of St. Placid owed its magnificent existence to the Ebag family. The apse had been given entirely by old Caiaphas Ebag (ex-M. P., now a paralytic sufferer) at a cost of twelve thousand pounds; and his was the original idea of building the church. When, owing to the decline of the workingman's interest in beer and one or two other things, Caiaphas lost nearly the whole of his fortune, which had been gained by honest labor in mighty speculations, he rather regretted the church; he would have preferred twelve thousand in cash to a view of the apse from his bedroom window; but he was man enough never to complain. He lived, after his misfortunes, in a comparatively small house with his two daughters, Mrs. Ebag and Miss Ebag. These two ladies are the heroines of the tale.

Mrs. Ebag had married her cousin, who had died. She possessed about six hundred a year of her own. She was two years older than her sister, Miss Ebag, a spinster. Miss Ebag was two years younger than Mrs. Ebag. No further information as to their respective ages ever leaked out. Miss Ebag had a little money of her own from her deceased mother, and Caiaphas had the wreck of his riches. The total income of the household was not far short of a thousand a year, but of this quite two hundred a year was absorbed by young Edith Ebag, Mrs Ebag's stepdaughter (for Mrs. Ebag had been her husband's second choice).

Edith, who was notorious as a silly chit and spent most of her time in London and other absurd places, formed no part of the household, though she visited it occasionally. The household consisted of old Caiaphas, bedridden, and his two daughters, and Goldie. Goldie was the tomcat, so termed by reason of his splendid tawniness. Goldie had more to do with the Ebag marriage than anyone or anything, except the weathercock on the top of the house. This may sound queer, but it is as naught to the queerness about to be unfolded.

II.

It cannot be considered unnatural that Mrs and Miss Ebag, with the assistance of the vicar, should have managed the affairs of the church. People nicknamed them "the church wardens," which was not quite nice, having regard to the fact that their sole aim was the truest welfare of the church. They and the vicar, in a friendly and effusive way, hated each other. Sometimes they got the better of the vicar, and, less often, he got the better of them. In the choice of a new organist, they won. Their candidate was Mr. Carl Ullman, the artistic orphan.

Mr. Carl Ullman is the hero of the tale. The son of one of those German designers of earthenware who at intervals come and settle in the Five Towns for the purpose of explaining fully to the inhabitants how inferior England is to Germany, he had an English mother, and he himself was violently English. He spoke English like an Englishman, and German like an Englishman. He could paint, model in clay, and play three musical instruments, including the organ. His one failing was that he could never earn enough to live on. It seemed as if he was always being drawn by an invisible string towards the workhouse door. Now and then he made half a sovereign extra by deputizing on the organ.

In such a manner had he been introduced to the Ebag ladies. His romantic and gloomy appearance had attracted them, with the result that they had asked him to lunch after the service, and he had remained with them till the evening service. During the visit they had learned that his grandfather had been court councillor in the kingdom of Saxony. Afterwards they often said to each other how ideal it would be if only Mr. Skerritt might be removed and Carl Ullman take his place. And when Mr. Skerritt actually was removed, by his own wickedness, they regarded it as almost an answer to prayer, and successfully employed their powerful interest on behalf of Carl.

The salary was a hundred a year. Not once in his life had Carl earned a hundred pounds in a single year. For him the situation meant opulence. He accepted it, but calmly, gloomily. Romantic gloom was his joy in life. He said with deep melancholy that he was sure he could not find a convenient lodging in Oldcastle. And the ladies Ebag then said that he must really come and spend a few days with them and Goldie and papa until he was "suited." He said that he hated to plant himself on people, and yielded to the request.

The ladies Ebag fussed around his dark eyed and tranquil pessimism, and both of them instantly grew younger—a curious but authentic phenomenon. They adored his playing, and they were enchanted to discover that his notions about hymn tunes agreed with theirs, and by consequence disagreed with the vicar's. In the first week or two they scored off the vicar five times, and the advantage of having your organist in your own house grew very apparent. They were also greatly impressed by his gentleness with Goldie, and by his intelligent interest in serious questions.

One day Miss Ebag said timidly to her sister: "It's just six months today."

"What do you mean, sister?" asked Mrs. Ebag self-consciously.

"Since Mr. Ullman came."

"So it is!" said Mrs. Ebag, who was just as well aware of the date as the spinster was aware of it. They said no more. The position was the least bit delicate. Carl had found no lodging. He did not offer to go. They did not want him to go. He did not offer to pay. And really he cost them nothing except laundry, whisky and fussing. How could they suggest that he should pay? He lived amidst them like a beautiful mystery, and all were seemingly content. Carl was probably saving the whole of his salary, for he never bought clothes, and he did not smoke. The ladies Ebag simply did what they liked about hymn tunes.

III.

You would have thought that no outsider would find a word to say, and you would have been mistaken. The fact that Mrs. Ebag was two years older than Miss, and Miss two years younger than Mrs. Ebag; the fact that old Caiaphas was, for strong reasons, always in the house; the fact that the ladies were notorious cat idolators; the fact that the reputation of the Ebag family was and had ever been spotless; the fact that the Ebag family had given the apse and practically created the entire church; all these facts added together did not prevent the outsider from finding a word to say.

At first words were not said; but looks were looked, and coughs were coughed. Then someone, strolling into the church of a morning while Carl Ullman was practicing, saw Miss Ebag sitting in silent ecstasy in a corner. And a few mornings later the same someone, whose curiosity had been excited, veritably saw Mrs. Ebag in the organ loft with Carl Ullman, but no sign of Miss Ebag. It was at this juncture that words began to be said.

Words! Not complete sentences! The sentences were never finished. "Of course, it's no affair of mine, but——" "I wonder that people like the Ebags should——?" "Not that I should ever dream of hinting that——" "First one, and then the other—well!" "I'm sure that if either Mrs. or Miss Ebag had the slightest idea they'd at once——" And so on. Intangible gossamer criticism, floating in the air!

IV.

One evening—it was precisely the first of June—when a thunderous storm was blowing up from the southwest, and scattering the smoke of the Five Towns to the four corners of the world, and making the weathercock of the house of the Ebags to creak, the ladies Ebag and Carl Ullman sat together as usual in the drawing room. The French window was open, but banged to at intervals. Carl Ullman had played the piano, and the ladies Ebag—Mrs. Ebag, somewhat comfortably stout, and Miss Ebag spare—were talking very well and very sensibly about the influence of music on character. They invariably chose such subjects for conversation. Carl was chiefly silent, but now and then, after a sip of whisky, he would say, "Yes" with impressiveness and stare gloomily out of the darkening window. The ladies Ebag had a remarkable example of the influence of music on character in the person of Edith Ebag. It appeared that Edith would never play anything but waltzes—Waldteufel's for choice—and that the foolish frivolity of her flyaway character was a direct consequence of this habit. Carl felt sadly glad, after hearing the description of Edith's carryings on that Edith had chosen to live far away.

And then the conversation languished and died with the daylight, and a certain self-consciousness obscured the social atmosphere. For a vague rumor of the chatter of the town had penetrated the house, and the ladies Ebag, though they scorned chatter, were affected by it; Carl Ullman, too. It had the customary effect of such chatter; it fixed the thoughts of those chatted about on matters which perhaps would not otherwise have occupied their attention.

The ladies Ebag said to themselves: "We are no longer aged 19. We are, moreover, living with our father. If he is bedridden, what then? This gossip connecting our names with that of Mr. Ullman is worse than baseless; it is preposterous. We assert positively that we have no designs of any kind on Mr. Ullman."

Nevertheless, by dint of thinking about that gossip, the naked idea of a marriage with Mr. Ullman soon ceased to shock them. They could gaze at it without going into hysterics.

As for Carl, he often meditated upon his own age, which might have been anything between 30 and 45, and upon the mysterious ages of the ladies, and upon their goodness, their charm, their seriousness, their intelligence, and their sympathy with himself.

Hence the self-consciousness in the gloaming.

To create a diversion, Miss Ebag walked primly to the window and cried:

"Goldie! Goldie!"

It was Goldie's bedtime. In summer he always strolled into the garden after dinner, and he nearly always sensibly responded to the call when his bed hour sounded. No one would have dreamed of retiring until Goldie was safely ensconced in his large basket under the stairs.

"Naughty Goldie!" Miss Ebag said, comprehensively, to the garden.

She went into the garden to search, and Mrs. Ebag followed her, and Carl Ullman followed Mrs. Ebag. And they searched without result, until it was black night and the threatening storm at last fell. The vision of Goldie out in that storm desolated the ladies, and Carl Ullman displayed the nicest feeling. At length the rain drove them in, and they stood in the drawing room with anxious faces, while two servants, under directions from Carl, searched the house for Goldie.

"If you please'm," stammered the housemaid, rushing rather unconventionally into the drawing room, "Cook says she thinks Goldie must be on the roof, in the vane."

"On the roof in the vane?" exclaimed Mrs. Ebag, pale. "In the vane?"

"Yes'm."

"Whatever do you mean, Sarah?" asked Miss Ebag, even paler.

The ladies Ebag were utterly convinced that Goldie was not like other cats, that he never went on the roof, that he never had any wish to do anything that was not in the strictest sense gentlemanly and correct. And if by chance he did go on the roof, it was merely to examine the roof itself, or to enjoy the view therefrom out of gentlemanly curiosity. So that this reference to the roof shocked them. The night did not favor the theory of view gazing.

"Cook says she heard the weather vane creaking ever since she went upstairs after dinner, and now it's stopped, and she can hear Goldie a-myowling like anything."

"Is cook in her attic?" asked Mrs. Ebag.

"Yes'm."

"Ask her to come out. Mr. Ullman, will you be so very good as to come upstairs and investigate?"

Cook, enveloped in a cloak, stood out on the second landing, while Mr. Ullman and the ladies invaded her chamber. The noise of myowling was terrible. Mr. Ullman opened the dormer window, and the rain burst in together with a fury of myowling. But he did not care. It lightened and thundered. But he did not care. He procured a chair of cook's and put it under the window and stood on it, with his back to the window and twisted forth his body so that he could spy up the roof. The ladies protested that he would be wet through, but he paid no heed to them.

Then his head, dripping, returned into the room.

"I've just seen by a flash of lightning," he said in a voice of emotion. "The poor animal has got his tail fast in the socket of the weather vane. He must have been whisking it about up there, and the vane turned and caught it. The vane is jammed."

"How dreadful!" sobbed Mrs. Ebag. "What ever can be done?"

"He'll be dead before morning," sobbed Miss Ebag.

"I shall climb up the roof and release him," said Carl Ullman gravely.

They forbade him to do so. Then they implored him to refrain. But he was adamant. And in their supplications there was a note of insincerity, for their hearts bled for Goldie, and, further, they were not altogether unwilling that Carl should prove himself a hero. And so, amid apprehensive feminine cries of the acuteness of his danger, Carl crawled out of the window and faced the thunder, the lightning, the rain, the slippery roof, and the maddened cat. A group of three servants was huddled outside the attic door.

In the attic the ladies could hear his movements on the roof, moving higher and higher. The suspense was acute. Then there was silence; even the myowling had ceased. Then a clap of thunder; and then, after that, a terrific clatter on the roof, a bounding downwards as of a great stone, a curse, a horrid pause, and finally a terrific smashing of foliage and cracking of wood.

Mrs. Ebag sprang to the window.

"It's all right," came a calm, gloomy voice from below. "I fell into the rhododendrons, and Goldie followed me. I'm not hurt, thank goodness! Just my luck!"

A bell rang immediately. It was the paralytic's bell. He had been disturbed by these unaccustomed phenomena.

"Sister, do go to father at once," said Mrs. Ebag, as they both hastened downstairs in a state of emotion, assuredly unique in their lives.

V.

Mrs. Ebag met Carl and the cat as they dripped into the gas lit drawing room. They presented a surprising spectacle, and they were doing damage to the Persian carpet at the rate of about five shillings a second; but that Carl and the beloved creature for whom he had dared so much were equally unhurt appeared to be indubitable. Of course, it was a miracle. It could not be regarded as other than a miracle. Mrs. Ebag gave vent to an exclamation in which were mingled pity, pride, admiration, and solicitude, and then remained, as it were, spellbound. The cat escaped from those protecting arms and fled away. Instead of following Goldie, Mrs. Ebag continued to gaze at the hero.

"How can I thank you?" she whispered.

"What for?" asked Carl, with laconic gloom.

"For having saved my darling!" said Mrs. Ebag. And there was passion in her voice.

"O!" said Carl. "It was nothing!"

"Nothing?" Mrs. Ebag repeated after him, with melting eyes, as if to imply that, instead of being nothing, it was everything; as if to imply that his deed must rank hereafter with the most splendid deeds of antiquity; as if to imply that the whole affair was beyond words to utter, or gratitude to repay.

And in fact Carl himself was moved. You cannot fall from the roof of a two story house into a very high class rhododendron bush, carrying a prize cat in your arms, without being a bit shaken. And Carl was a bit shaken, not merely physically, but morally and spiritually. He could not deny to himself that he had after all done something rather wondrous, which ought to be celebrated in sounding verse. He felt that he was in an atmosphere far removed from the commonplace.

He dripped steadily on to the carpet.

"You know how dear my cat was to me," proceeded Mrs. Ebag. "And you risked your life to spare me the pain of his suffering, perhaps his death. How thankful I am that I insisted on having those rhododendrons planted just where they are—fifteen years ago! I never anticipated——"

She stopped. Tears came into her dowager eyes.

It was obvious that she worshiped him. She was so absorbed in his heroism that she had no thought even for his dampness. As Carl's eyes met hers, she seemed, to him, to grow younger. And there came into his mind all the rumor that had vaguely reached him coupling their names together; and also his early dreams of love and passion and a marriage that would be one long honeymoon. And he saw how absurd had been those early dreams. He saw that the best chance of a felicitous marriage lay in a union of mature and serious persons, animated by grave interests and lofty ideals.

Yes, she was older than he. But not much, not much! Not more than—how many years? And he remembered surprising her rapt glance that very evening as she watched him playing the piano. What had romance to do with age? Romance could occur at any age. It was occurring now. Her soft eyes, her portly form, exuded romance. And had not the renowned Beaconsfield espoused a lady appreciably older than himself, and did not those espousals achieve the ideal of bliss?

In the act of saving the cat, he had not been definitely aware that it was so particularly her cat. He had been aware merely of saving the cat of the household. But now, influenced by her attitude and her shining reverence, he actually did begin to persuade himself that an uncontrollable instinctive desire to please her and win her for his own had moved him to undertake the perilous passage of the sloping roof.

In short, the idle chatter of the town was about to be justified. In another moment he might have dripped into her generous arms—had not Miss Ebag swept into the drawing room.

"Gracious!" gasped Miss Ebag. "The poor dear thing will have pneumonia. Sister, you know his chest is not strong. Dear Mr. Ullman, please, please, do go and—er—change."

He did the discreet thing and went to bed, hot whisky following him on a tray carried by the housemaid.

VI.

The next morning the slightly unusual happened. It was the custom for Carl Ullman to breakfast alone, while reading the Staffordshire Signal. The ladies Ebag breakfasted mysteriously in bed. But on this morning Carl found Miss Ebag before him in the breakfast room. She prosecuted minute inquiries as to his health and nerves. She went out with him to regard the rhododendron bushes, and shuddered at the sight of the ruin which had saved him. She said, following famous philosophers, that Chance was merely the name we give to the effect of laws which we cannot understand. And, upon this high level of conversation, she poured forth his coffee and passed his toast.

It was a lovely morning after the tempest.

Goldie, all newly combed, and looking as though he had never seen a roof, strolled pompously into the room with tail unfurled. Miss Ebag picked the animal up and kissed it passionately.

"Darling!" she murmured, not exactly to Mr. Ullman, nor yet exactly to the cat. Then she glanced effulgently at Carl and said: "When I think that you risked your precious life, in that awful storm, to save my poor Goldie! . . . You must have guessed how dear he was to me! . . . No, really, Mr. Ullman, I cannot thank you properly! I can't express my——"

Her eyes were moist.

Although not young, she was two years younger. Her age was two years less. The touch of man had never profaned her. No masculine kiss had ever rested on that cheek, that mouth. And Carl felt that he might be the first to cull the flower that had so long waited. He did not see, just then, the hollow beneath her chin, the two lines of sinew that, bounding a depression, disappeared beneath her collarette. He saw only her soul. He guessed that she would be more malleable than the widow, and he was sure that she was not in a position, as the widow was, to make comparisons between husbands. Certainly there appeared to be some confusion as to the proprietorship of this cat. Certainly he could not have saved the cat's life for love of two different persons. But that was beside the point. The essential thing was that he began to be glad that he had done nothing definite with the widow on the previous evening.

"Darling!" said she again, with a new access of passion, kissing Goldie, but darting a glance at Carl.

He might have put to her the momentous question, between two bites of buttered toast, had not Mrs. Ebag, at the precise instant, swung amply into the room.

"Sister! You up!" exclaimed Miss Ebag.

"And you, sister!" retorted Mrs. Ebag.

VII.

It is impossible to divine what might have occurred for the delectation of the very ancient borough of Oldcastle, if that frivolous piece of goods, Edith, had not taken it into her head to run down from London for a few days, on the plea that London was too ridiculously hot. She was a pretty girl, with fluffy, honey colored hair and about thirty white frocks. And she seemed to be quite as silly as her staid stepmother and her prim step-aunt had said. She transformed the careful order of the house into a wild disorder, and left a novel or so lying on the drawing room table between her stepmother's Contemporary Review and her step-aunt's "History of European Morals." Her taste in music was candidly and brazenly bad. It was a fact, as her elders had stated, that she played nothing but waltzes. What was worse, she compelled Carl Ullman to perform waltzes. And one day she burst into the drawing room when Carl was alone there, with a roll under her luscious arm, and said:

"What do you think I've found at Barrowfoot's?"

"I don't know," said Carl, gloomily smiling, and then smiling without gloom.

"Waldteufel's waltzes arranged for four hands. You must play them with me at once."

And he did. It was a sad spectacle, for archangels, to see the organist of St. Placid's galloping through a series of dances with the empty headed Edith.

The worst was, he liked it. He enjoyed it. He knew that he ought to prefer the high intellectual plane, the severe artistic tastes, of the elderly sisters. But he did not. He was amazed to discover that frivolity appealed more powerfully to his secret soul. He was also amazed to discover that his gloom was leaving him. This vanishing of gloom gave him strange sensations, akin to the sensations of a man who, after having worn gaiters into middle age, abandons them.

After the Waldteufel she began to tell him all about herself; how she went slumming in the East End, and how jolly it was. And how she helped in the Bloomsbury Settlement, and how jolly that was. And, later, she said:

"You must have thought it very odd of me, Mr. Ullman, not thanking you for so bravely rescuing my poor cat; but the truth is I never heard of it till today. I can't say how grateful I am. I should have loved to see you doing it."

"Is Goldie your cat?" he feebly inquired.

"Why, of course!" she said. "Didn't you know? Of course you did! Goldie always belonged to me. Grandpa bought him for me. But I couldn't do with him in London, so I always leave him here for them to take care of. He adores me. He never forgets me. He'll come to me before anyone. You must have noticed that. I can't say how grateful I am! It was perfectly marvelous of you! I can't help laughing, though, whenever I think what a state mother and auntie must have been in that night!"

Strictly speaking, they hadn't a cent between them, except his hundred a year. But he married her hair, and she married his melancholy eyes; and she was content to settle in Oldcastle, where there are almost no slums. And her stepmother was forced by Edith to make the hundred up to four hundred. This was rather hard on Mrs. Ebag. Thus it fell out that Mrs. Ebag remained a widow, and that Miss Ebag continues a flower unculled. However, gossip was stifled.

In his appointed time, and in the fullness of years, Goldie died, and was mourned. And by none was he more sincerely mourned than by the aged bedridden Caiaphas.

"I miss my cat, I can tell ye!" said old Caiaphas pettishly to Carl, who was sitting by his couch. "He knew his master, Goldie did! Edith did her best to steal him from me when you married and set up house. A nice thing, considering I bought him and he never belonged to anybody but me! Ay! I shall never have another cat like that cat!"

[illegible] the whole truth of the affair.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE

by Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes.

SYNOPSIS.

Dr. Stephen Royce and Dick Freneau, an adventurer, love Gloria Stafford, daughter of the multimillionaire. Freneau proposes and is accepted. Meanwhile he pursues his affairs with Lois Freeman Stafford, wife of David Stafford, Gloria's brother. Lois learns of the intended marriage and threatens suicide rather than witness it. Freneau temporizes—declares he loves her (Lois) but must marry Gloria for financial reasons. Lois believes. David, her husband, by an anonymous letter, learns of Lois' infatuation for Freneau—whose name is synonymous with disgraceful affairs. In fact, Gideon Trask, father of Nell, one of his unfortunate victims, is on Freneau's trail swearing revenge. Meanwhile Lois promises to meet Freneau at the soldiers' monument, from where they will go to a Catskill village for a week. Freneau goes to the monument. There he is killed. Three men are seen near him. Gloria sees it all from her window. She swears to find Freneau's murderer.

EIGHTEENTH INSTALLMENT.

THE envelope Gloria held had suddenly revived her memories as clear as reality. Her first memory was of the scene in her room when she snatched the envelope from Dick Freneau and teased him with it, never dreaming what it contained. Next she saw anew that scene in font of the Soldiers and Sailors' monument which she had witnessed through the binoculars. Once more she beheld the monument in the moonlight and the snow light; the man in evening dress, with his collar up and his hat down, skulking in the shadows; then the appearance of Trask, the unexpected coming of Dick Freneau, his pause to light his cigaret while Gloria from afar helplessly watched the assassin creep up on him and throttle him to death.

Trask vanished and the skulker came by again, stumbled over Dick's body, knelt, listened to his heartbeat, then, satisfied of his death, ghoulishly rifled his pockets and took from them this very envelope that had come back into her hands so curiously through the prank of a mischievous child.

Into the vivid tableau of that memory the kneeling figure of Dr. Royce fitted to perfection. Gloria had a sudden intuition that she understood the truth at last. Dr. Royce had told her that her vision was delirium because it was himself that she had seen.

All his devotion now took on a new and hideous look. He had not cared for her. He had meant only to blind her and divert her from her revenge. He had nearly succeeded.

She advanced at once on the kneeling Royce and cried out upon him:

"It was you, then! You of all the people in the world! I see you now as plainly as I did that night, only I was too foolish to suspect you."

"What do you mean, Gloria?" Royce asked hoarsely.

"I mean that you had a share in the murder of my poor lover. You hired that beast Trask and you went there to make sure he did his work well."

"Gloria, Gloria!" Royce sighed, so deep and honest a sorrow in his face that Gloria was staggered. But only for a moment. Her wrath carried her on:

"You made a fool of me for a long time, but you were too clever too long, and now I know—I know a little at least, and I'm going to know more. Why did you kill my Dick?"

"I didn't want to kill him, Gloria. I knew how you loved him and I would have given my life to keep you from pain, then as now. You've got to believe me."

"Believe you? When you told me that all I saw was delirium? When you drugged me that night in the hope that I would forget? When you dragged his body away and threw it in the river? Ugh, the horrible brutality of it!"

Royce stood trembling with confusion. Gloria took his silence for a confession. She quivered before the confirmation of her charge. From her weak hand the envelope slipped. As she bent to recover it one of the inclosed letters fell out and the breeze blew it crisply away, opening it as it fluttered. She caught it at the edge of the pool. She could not help reading it at a glance.

The handwriting she recognized without the aid of the signature. Her brain almost refused to accept what her eyes beheld:

"Beloved Dick: Don't hate me for compelling you to make this trip, but I am frantic with jealousy of Gloria, and if you fail me I will do something desperate. Your adoring and once adored LOIS."

Gloria dropped on a marble bench while the ground seemed to be shaken beneath her. So Freneau had planned to make a journey with Lois! It was plainly at Lois' demand, yet he had consented and arranged to go. The story Frank Mulry told her had been a lie, too. Freneau had had an affair with Lois, with the wife of Gloria's own brother!

This treachery in her own household was like a nausea; it sickened her. She turned to Royce, no longer demanding, but appealing: "In heaven's name tell me the truth."

Royce felt that the time was over for deception. The truth could not hurt Gloria worse than appearances. He approached her and spoke with the tenderness of a physician as well as a lover.

"You shall have the truth, Gloria, or as much of it as I know. I tried to keep it from you because you were ill and you were young and I was afraid that the ugly reality would kill you. While you were still very ill with pneumonia I stumbled on the fact that Freneau was carrying on an affair with—with the woman, the wretched woman who wrote that letter. I happened to overhear him tell her to meet him at midnight at the pavilion near the monument. I had known that he was a scoundrel, and had always been a roué. But you had loved him, so I had begged him to play fair with you. And he had promised.

"When I heard him make that rendezvous with—with that woman, I went right to him and told him that I knew of his vile scheme. I demanded that he break off the affair. Besides, the woman's husband was one of my dearest friends and I wanted to protect his home as well as your heart.

"Freneau laughed at my earnestness and ridiculed me, resented my interference, called me a meddler and a busybody. I told him I would prevent his treachery at all costs. I took my revolver with me. I didn't mean to kill him. The revolver was not even loaded. But I intended to frighten him with it.

"I waited and waited for Freneau to appear. At last I walked down the drive expecting to meet him. I found his body lying in the snow. I knelt down and listened to his heart. It was still. He was dead beyond all rescue.

"I saw that envelope in his pocket. I didn't know what was in it, but I was afraid of what it might contain. I imagined the police discovering him and the newspapers publishing what was found on his person. Before I realized what I was doing I took the envelope. I saw somebody coming along the drive. I didn't know who it was. I don't know now, but I ran away.

"When I got back to my office I found word that your nurse had called for me. I ran to your house. You told me you had seen the murder done. You had seen me without recognizing me. I told you it was a delirium like the other you had had. I looked through the binoculars when I went out on the drive. Freneau's body was gone. I was dumfounded. I almost believed that I had imagined the whole thing myself.

"I went to the pavilion. There I saw a woman, the woman, waiting for Freneau. I told her that he had been killed. She was frantic with grief. I sent her home and went back to you. You were in a state of hysteria. I gave you a drug to keep you from losing your mind.

"I had no idea then, I have none now, as to the murderer's name or the name of the man who took the body away. I had never seen this man Trask till you pointed him out to me. I can't imagine what grudge he had against Freneau or whether he disposed of the body or not. He is your captive now, and I intend to do all I can to get the truth from him."

Gloria's mind was not too busy with its own thoughts to heed the profound devotion of his tone. Her heart softened toward him a little, and once more Freneau was on trial before her soul. But all she said was:

"The night court! Judge Freeman let Trask go. He tried to persuade me not to pursue him again. What reason did he have? He must have known Trask. He's got to tell the truth."

Royce disclaimed all knowledge of Judge Freeman's knowledge, or his motives. He saw Judge Freeman coming into the driveway in his car. He saw the judge's daughter Lois greet him.

Gloria saw him, too, and she did not wait. She glared at Lois with savage disgust and curtly demanded a word from the judge. She beckoned to him and walked away, and the old jurist followed her like a guilty lad going to his punishment.

Gloria moved away to a secluded bench in a bowered nook.

"Now you shall speak. You are going to tell me why you let the murderer of Dick Freneau go free. You are going to tell me what you know about him. I can only think of one reason. You know that your daughter was going to run away with him and you had him put out of the way. It was you and nobody else that hired Trask, and that is why you sent him away when he happened to be brought into your court."

Judge Freeman smiled drearily at the accusation. He shook his head.

"No, Gloria, my child, you can't fasten a murder on me, and once more I advise you to keep your pretty fingers out of the fire. If you don't you'll destroy somebody who is very dear to you."

"Don't tell me any more lies, judge, or you'll burn your own fingers. You don't know how much I have found out. You'd better tell me what you know or you'll destroy your own daughter, for David will divorce her when he learns how false she has been to him."

"David knows! David knew!" the judge retorted, driven to bay by Gloria's manner.

Gloria laughed at this. "Do you suppose that my brother would tolerate her presence here at his side if he knew? Look! there they are together."

She pointed to a distant hilltop where David stood with his arm about his wife. The judge rose and glanced at the couple, then sank back with a groan.

"He has forgiven her, perhaps, because he feels that he has committed as great a crime as hers."

Gloria was infuriated at this attack on her brother.

"It's outrageous of you to try to besmirch the best man that lives. He has been blind to your daughter's treachery, but that is his only fault."

"He has not been blind. He knew!" the judge insisted. "Listen, Gloria. On the night of the murder I met your brother at a club. He was greatly excited. I said, 'What are you doing here? You told me and you told Lois that you were going south for a week.' David was like a madman. He said: 'I only pretended to go.' He took a letter from his pocket and beat it with his hands. 'I've had an anonymous letter sent to me,' he said, 'and it's put me on my guard. If what it says is true, I've got to kill a man.' I tried to calm him, but a club bore came up, and while he held me David got away.

"I was frightened. I hurried from the club. I went to his house. He was not there. The butler said that Lois had left the house alone and walked toward the drive. She had told me she was going out of town. I had seen her baggage leave the house. I walked over to the drive. I found Freneau's car with a smashed wheel. The chauffeur said that Freneau had left it and walked north some time before. I hurried on.

"In front of the monument I stumbled over Freneau's body. I knelt down. He was dead. I nearly lost my mind with horror. Evidently David had followed him up, had met him, and killed him, leaving the body for the first policeman to find.

"It was late and cold and the drive was deserted. As a judge, I had seen so many families ruined by some mad act, I could only think of one thing, the legal rule that the corpus delicti, the body of the dead man, must be produced or its existence proved. The insane inspiration came to me that if I could get rid of the body I could save poor David from going to the chair, I could save my poor daughter from being disgraced before the whole world. I loved David and I love Lois, of course. They were my children. Neither of them realized the hideous consequences. Lois was my only daughter. She was born with a frivolous soul. She couldn't help it. Her mother died as your mother did, before she could guide or control the young heart. David is a splendid man; he loved Lois to distraction. He felt that his honor could only be cleansed of its stain by the blood of Freneau. He was the guilty dog. He led my daughter astray. He played with your trust. He was a black hearted——"

"Stop!" Gloria cried. "It's cowardly to lay all the blame on the one who cannot defend himself either with lies or truth."

The judge sighed and went on: "Well, let the guilt lie where the Lord will place it. All I knew was that I had heard your brother threaten to kill a man and that I found the man dead a little later. All my honor and responsibility as a judge was forgotten in the first law of a father, to protect his children from the world.

"I am old and I will take what blame is mine or my children's. I lifted the body of Freneau and dragged it back of the monument. A policeman went by yawning and noticed nothing. I dragged the body down the steep steps and along the winding pathways, down to the railroad tracks, and across them to an old dock.

"Not a human being was in sight. I—I rolled the body off into the water. There was a splash and then I turned and climbed the hill and went home. I telephoned to Lois. She answered me and said that I had wakened her from her sleep. I asked if David was there. She said that she had taken him to the train. The next day I learned that he had come back, saying that he had found the journey unnecessary.

"I lived in agony for a week. Then Freneau's body was found in the lower bay, where the current had taken it. The papers said he had committed suicide because of financial troubles. It seemed best to let the secret go. What could it profit anybody to tell the truth now?

"When they told me that you had seen the murder done I was aghast. Evidently you did not see me drag the body away. When you pointed out Trask in the night court, I could only believe that you had been mistaken in the man, or that David had hired him. I had not the courage to hold him and let him speak, so I added one more shame to my malfeasance in office.

"And now you know all that I know. Trask is here, David is here. If you want your brother accused in the open court of murder, if you want your family in the headlines of all the papers, then go ahead, turn Trask over to the police and I will take my punishment with the rest."

He walked away heavily as if the burden of life were breaking him down. Gloria stood in a daze, her mind picturing the catastrophe that must overtake the family if she were to speak.

The world was very beautiful, especially here in this paradise. She saw David with Lois. Her heart quivered at the thought of exposing him to public shame. She thought of him cowering in a cell in the death house because of her determination to avenge a lover of most doubtful honor.

She saw a servant approach David and Lois; then David hurried to the house. He had been called to the telephone, perhaps. Lois sat down to wait for him. An irresistible and very womanly impulse sent Gloria straight toward her. Lois looked up with a smile as Gloria approached. Lois was happy. She had been wicked and escaped punishment. She had repented and been enabled to keep what she had lost the right to possess. Her husband did not know of her guilt; he was no longer jealous. And Dr. Royce was about to restore to her those letters of hers which were an everlasting danger to her till she could regain them and make sure of their destruction.

Her smile faded as she saw the look of wrathful contempt in Gloria's eyes. Then she caught a glimpse of that fateful envelope which she had last seen in Dr. Royce's hands. How could Gloria have obtained it? Of all people in the world, Gloria was most to be dreaded with those letters in her possession. Lois' heart began to pound, her mind told her to run, but her knees could not even uphold her.

Gloria wasted no time on prefaces. She said: "I see that you recognize these letters. Shall I give them to David now, or have you anything to say first?"

"What shall I say? What can I say," Lois stammered.

"You might begin with the truth. What was Dick Freneau to you."

Lois shivered at having to make confession before such a court, for Gloria was young and clean minded and she could not understand the desires and the passions of a woman like Lois. And Gloria, too, had been wronged. Her lover had been killed in his sins. Lois realized what a hateful face vice wears when its pink domino is ripped from its smile.

But Lois told her story, justifying herself by laying all the blame on Freneau or on Gloria.

Freneau had made her utterly his and led her into the depths of guilt only to cast her off when Gloria appeared in all her panoply of youth and innocence and idolatry.

She told Gloria that Freneau had protested to her that he did not love Gloria, but only wished to marry her to save himself from bankruptcy and poverty.

This was an unwise confession, for Gloria was revolted by the profanation of her love. She did not believe the charge. She cried out hoarsely that it was a black falsehood. Lois persisted that it was true. But she had lost the tone of contrition and Gloria had lost all power of mercy.

When Lois finished her story and told of Freneau's plan to elope with her, Gloria's heart was hard as marble. Lois made her final plea:

"I have sinned, but I have atoned, and David trusts me. Give me back the letters and let our lives go on in peace."

Gloria looked at her in wonder, and sneered:

"You don't ask much of life, do you? You have the love of two men and bring one to death and one perhaps to crime, and then you say: 'Don't let any harm befall me. I must keep everything!' You ask a little too much, Lois."

Lois stared at her in amazement.

"You don't mean that you are going to tell David what I have told you?"

"Yes."

"And wreck our life together?"

"That is for him to decide. He shall have the truth, and then he can do what he pleases."

"You will give him the letters?"

Gloria nodded grimly. Lois stood wavering in despair. The silence was pierced by the distant cry of a locomotive's whistle. An express train was coming round a far off curve. It would sweep down the tracks that ran at the foot of the Stafford estate, along the edge of the river.

Lois hearkened a moment, then the engine shrieked again. She made her wild decision.

"Give him the letters, then. It won't matter to me."

She turned and ran down the long terraces sloping to the embankment that hid the track from view.

Gloria ran after her calling, calling. But Lois was far ahead of her and the train was rushing with monstrous speed to the meeting place.

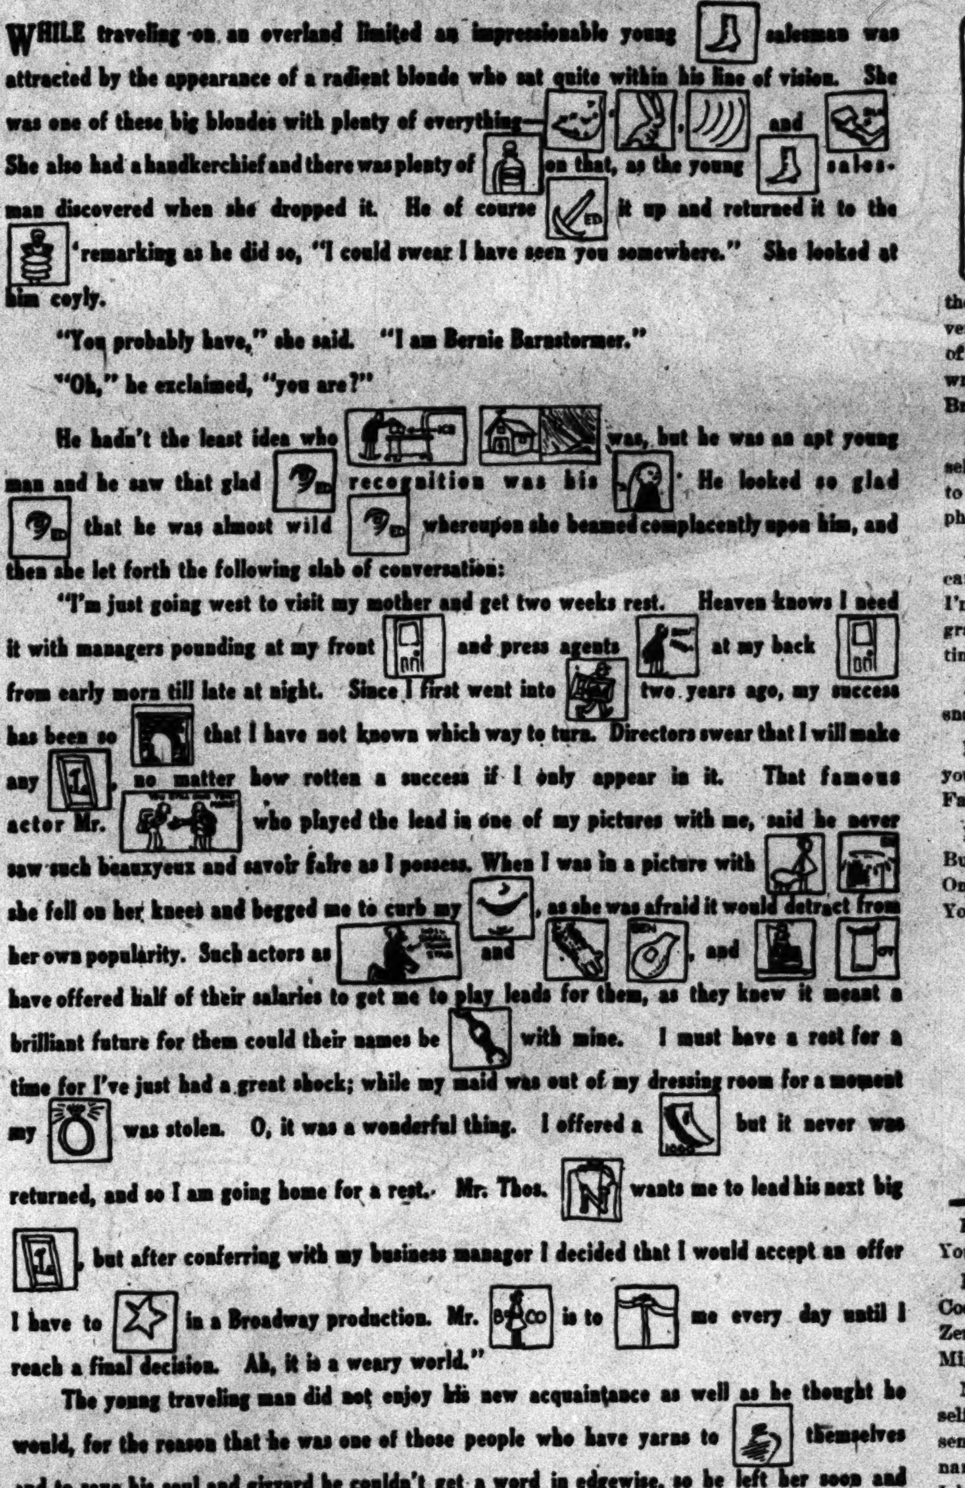
WE counted the votes and said: "Well, Gerda Holmes goes in the 'frame' again." The last time she appeared in the "frame" she was with the Essanay company. Since that time she has changed her affiliations and is now with the World Film company. Miss Holmes, who in private life is the wife of Rapley Holmes, was born in Chicago some twenty-five years ago. Her people came here from Denmark. They then went back to Denmark, and it was not until she was 16 that she returned to the United States. She began to think about her career, and decided that she would sing, being the possessor of a remarkably rich and rather beautiful voice. However, fate changed things around for her. She went on the speaking stage for a time. She then joined the Thanhauser company, and from there went to Essanay. Later she was with the United Photoplays company and remained there until she joined the World. Miss Holmes is quite tall, has dark hair and beautiful dark eyes. She is a good actress and a really delightful woman.

A REBUS.

Can you rebe this rebus. If so, do so, and send in the results. Maybe I'll—— well—— Maybe?



WHILE traveling on an overland limited an impressionable young salesman was attracted by the appearance of a radiant blonde who sat quite within his line of vision. She was one of these big blondes with plenty of everything— , , and . She also had a handkerchief and there was plenty of on that, as the young salesman discovered when she dropped it. He of course it up and returned it to the 'remarking as he did so, "I could swear I have seen you somewhere." She looked at him coyly.

"You probably have," she said. "I am Bernie Barnstormer."

"Oh," he exclaimed, "you are?"

He hadn't the least idea who was, but he was an apt young man and he saw that glad recognition was his . He looked so glad that he was almost wild whereupon she beamed complacently upon him, and then she let forth the following slab of conversation:

"I'm just going west to visit my mother and get two weeks rest. Heaven knows I need it with managers pounding at my front and press agents at my back from early morn till late at night. Since I first went into two years ago, my success has been so that I have not known which way to turn. Directors swear that I will make any , no matter how rotten a success if I only appear in it. That famous actor Mr. who played the lead in one of my pictures with me, said he never saw such beauxyeux and savoir faire as I possess. When I was in a picture with she fell on her knees and begged me to curb my , as she was afraid it would detract from her own popularity. Such actors as and , and have offered half of their salaries to get me to play leads for them, as they knew it meant a brilliant future for them could their names be with mine. I must have a rest for a time for I've just had a great shock; while my maid was out of my dressing room for a moment my was stolen. O, it was a wonderful thing. I offered a but it never was returned, and so I am going home for a rest. Mr. Thos. wants me to lead his next big , but after conferring with my business manager I decided that I would accept an offer I have to in a Broadway production. Mr. is to me every day until I reach a final decision. Ah, it is a weary world."

The young traveling man did not enjoy his new acquaintance as well as he thought he would, for the reason that he was one of those people who have yarns to themselves and to save his soul and gizzard he couldn't get a word in edgewise, so he left her soon and spent the rest of the time in the smoker.

Some time later he met Mr. Thos. and said to him: "I had the pleasure of meeting your wonderful , Miss , some blonde!"

The famous director looked puzzled. He repeated the name time and again to himself. Finally a light dawned in his puzzled "Oh," he said, "I guess you must mean that who's been pestering me for a chance as extra for the last six months. Beauty? Yes. But no brains."

THE TEENIE WEENIE

TURK INVENTS A GAME

BY WM. DONAHEY.

"WHAT'S on your mind?" asked the Dunce, walking up to the Turk, who stood leaning against the rail of the Teenie Weenie house boat looking thoughtfully at a small block that bobbed up and down in the water.

"I was just thinking that if we had a few more blocks like that one over there we could have a lot of fun."

"How?" asked the Dunce.

"Well," answered the Turk, "we could have a water ball game."

"Oh, jimminie Christmas!" exclaimed the Dunce. "Go on."

"That big block could be used for the catcher and batter to stand on, and with four smaller ones for the first base man, pitcher, and two outfielders we could have a dandy game. We'd have only one base and the batter would have to swim to and from it, and the fielders would have to swim after the ball if it was knocked out of their reach."

"Jinks! Let's get up a couple of teams and have a game this afternoon," suggested the Dunce.

"All right, let's do it," laughed the Turk, and immediately the little fellows set out to get up their teams.

The Teenie Weenies were all interested in the game and in a short time the two teams were made up as follows:

DUNCES	POSITION	TURKS
Clown	Center field	Indian
Gogo	Catcher	Sailor
Cowboy	Left field	Chinaman
Doctor	First base	Cook
Dunce	Pitcher	Turk

The Teenie Weenies found several blocks and a couple of old corks that could be used for the bases, while the Dunce made a ball out of a piece of cork and wound it tightly with some silk thread.

When a place was found at the end of a boat landing where the Teenie Weenie fans could watch the game, the bases were brought up and anchored in place by attaching strings to them with old nails and pebbles tied to the other end. The Dutchman made a wonderful bat out of a match and all the little players agreed that it was a fine piece of work.

One hour after lunch the players put on their bathing suits and hurried off for the game, followed by the rest of the Teenie Weenies.

The game proved to be a good one, the Dunces getting a run in the first inning, while the Turks tied the score in the last half of the fourth. Many wonderful plays were made by the little players, but it wasn't until the last half of the ninth that the really big play of the game took place.

With two out, the Sailor on first, and the Turk at bat in the last half of the ninth, the Clown brought the excited crowd to their feet with a wonderful play. The Turk swung the match with all his might, for the Turks needed one run to tie the game. The bat struck the ball fairly and sent it whizzing over the Dunce's head. The Dunce leaped for the ball, just touching it with the end of his fingers, while the Sailor swam for the home plate with all his might.

It looked like a sure hit and the Turk's side shouted with delight, but their joy soon faded when the Clown made a mighty leap into the air, grabbed the ball, disappeared under the water with a great splash and came up spouting with it in his hand, winning the game for the Dunces.

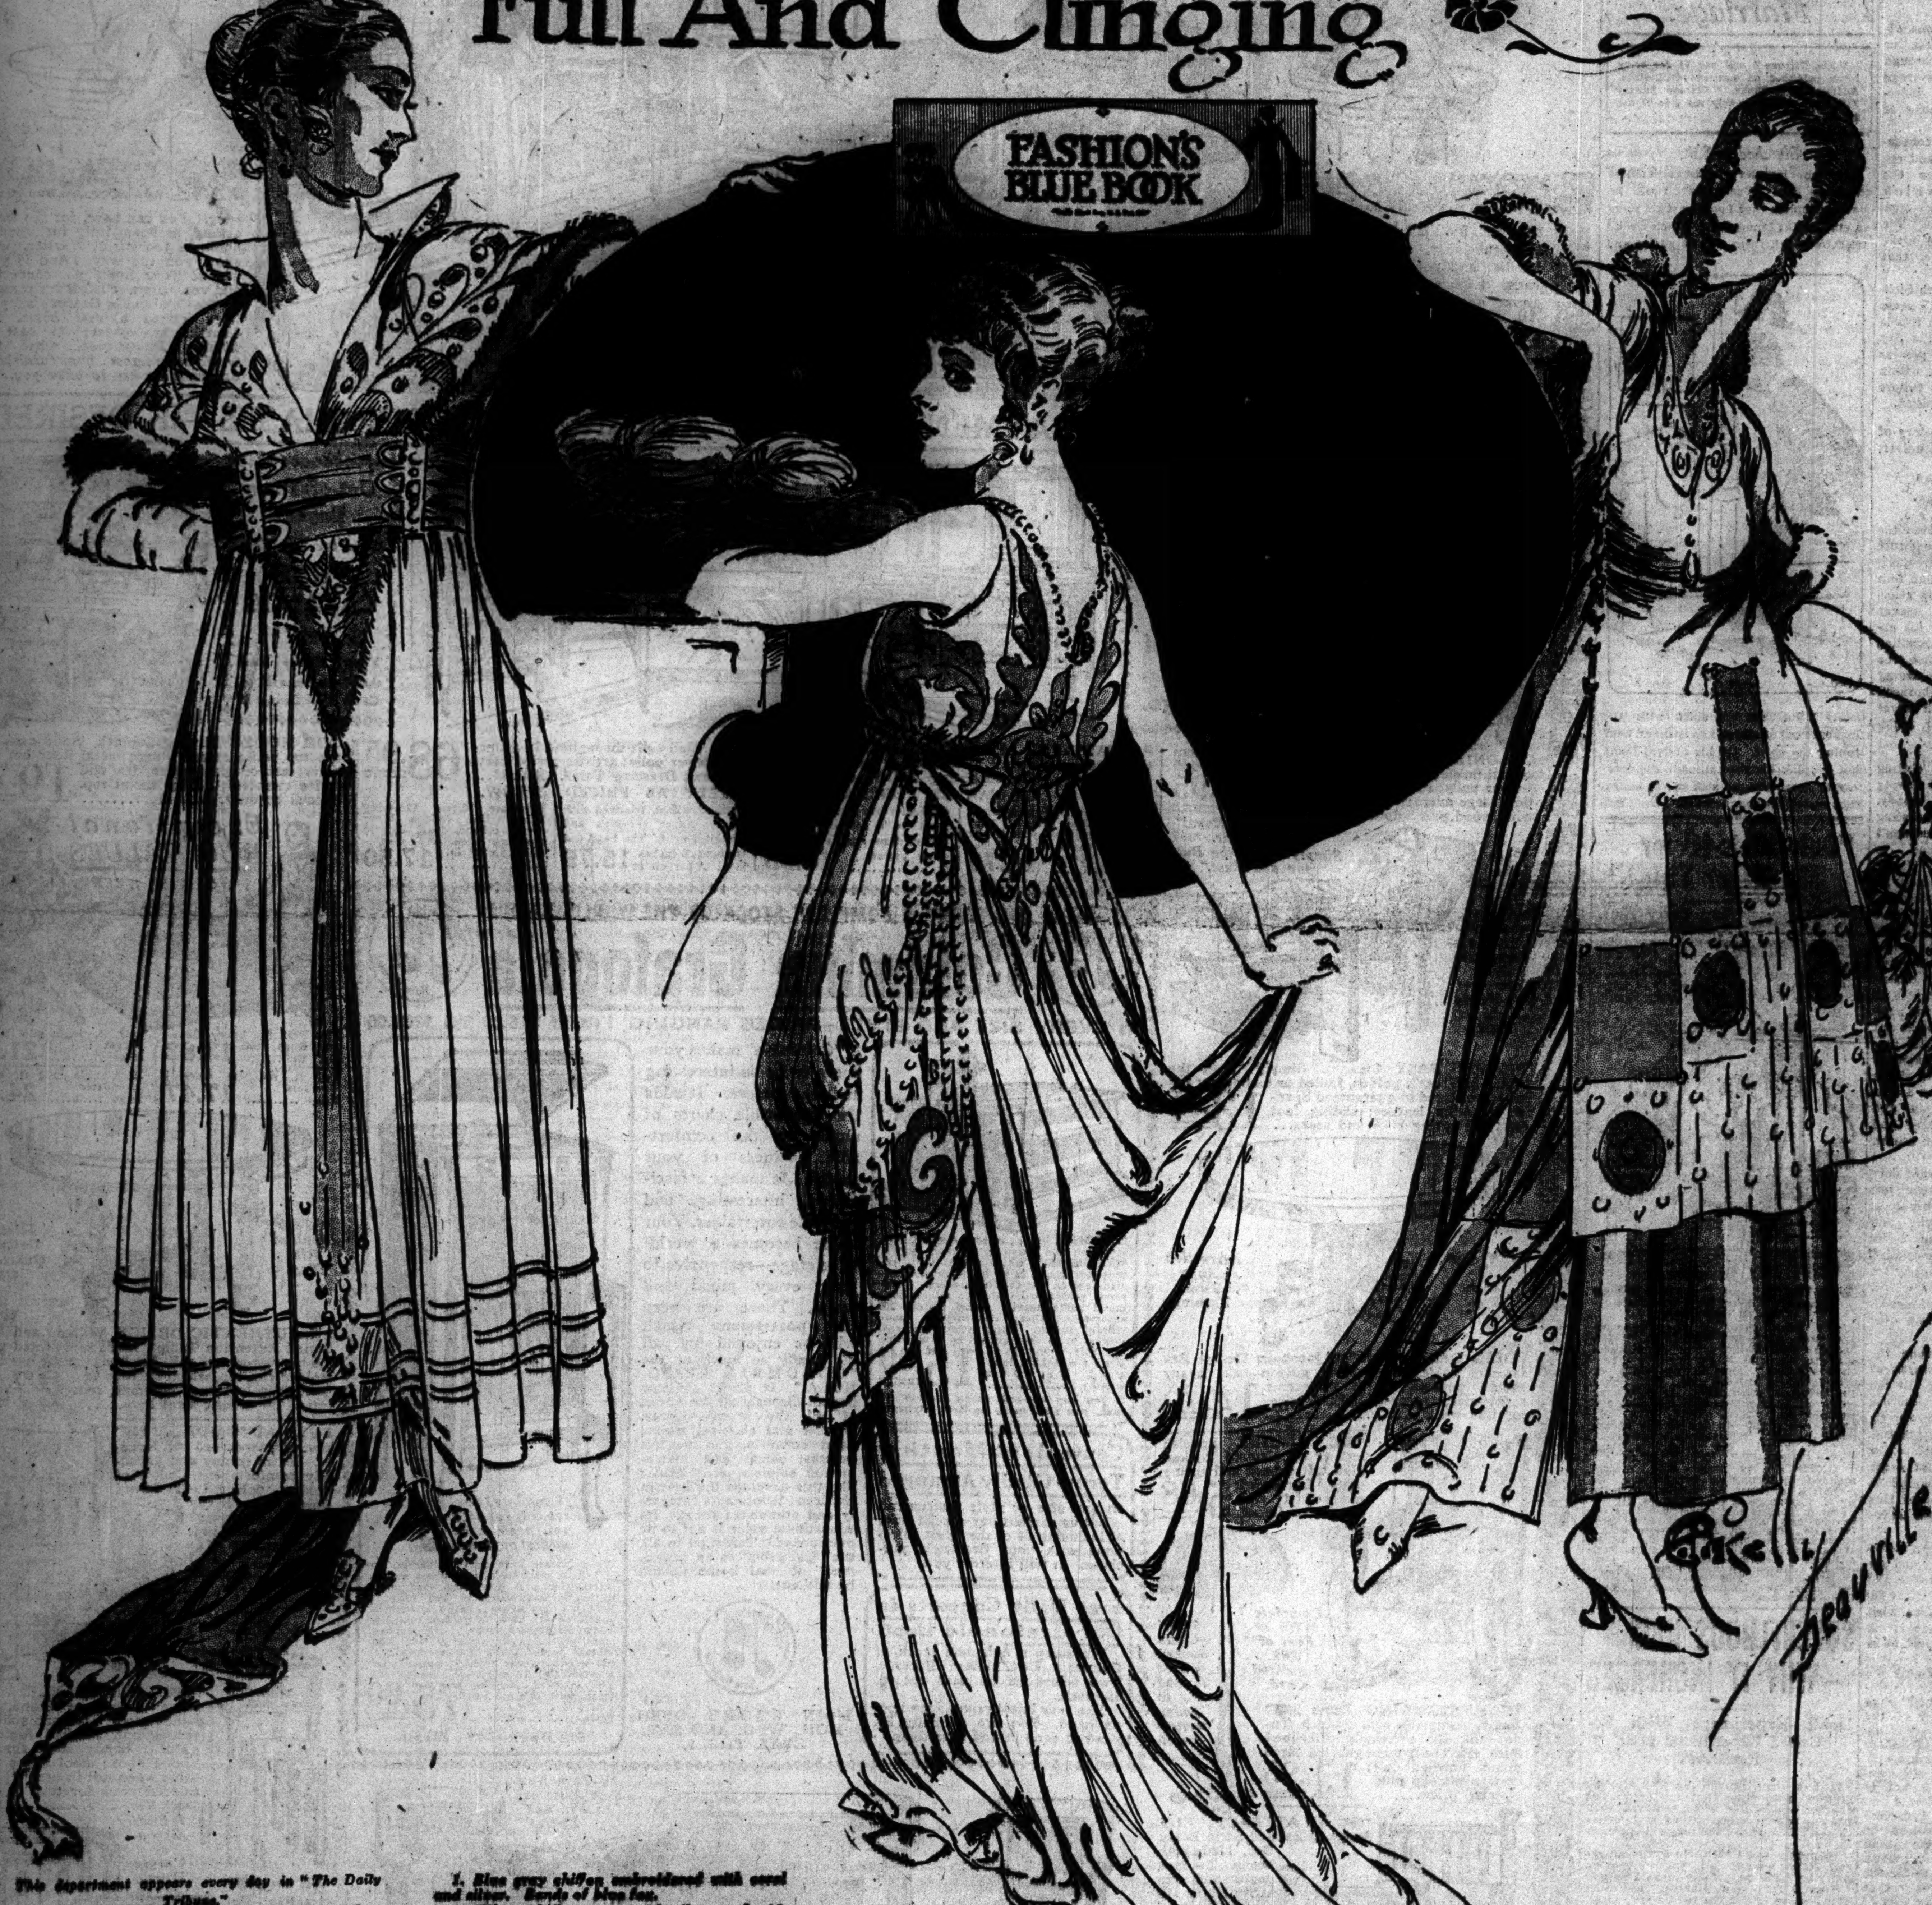
Winter Evening Gowns Will Be Long And Full And Clinging



This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

By Jean Seivwright.

Drawings by E. C. Kelly.

(Copyright: 1916: By The Chicago Tribune and the New York Globe.)

1. Blue gray chiffon embroidered with coral and silver. Bands of blue fox.

2. White chiffon satin with silver embroidered chiffon and silver bands.

3. Pale gold chiffon velvet with white and silver embroidery. Fitch fur.

INFINITE variety is found in the new styles for fall, especially those which are destined for evening wear. Some of the most interesting gowns reveal the classic influence in their long, clinging draperies. Others affect the Empire period, while picturesque dress of the moyen age has given inspiration to many a creator of beautiful attire.

Pictured on this page are three exceedingly attractive creations that will doubtless afford suggestions to those who are now considering their fall dress. A handsome white chiffon satin is chosen for the gown that centers this page. The chiffon corsage, simple fashioned, is lavishly embroidered with silver in a regal oak leaf pattern. A small triangular piece of embroidered chiffon extends for several inches from the waist line down the back, so that the long, sweeping lines of the dress are cleverly accentuated.

Silver beads outline the corsage and are festooned about the skirt, whose tunic-like draperies are also elaborated with the silver embroidery. The fan, made of white ostrich plumes tipped with silver, indicates the favor that is still bestowed on the plumage of this bird.

To the right is another magnificent model originated in pale gold chiffon velvet. Long lines, too, characterize this model, even though the loose panels in the skirt suggest a greater fullness than really exists. Fitch fur is chosen for the collar as well as the edging of the sleeves, while wonderful white and silver embroidery is so disposed that a chessboard is recalled in the trimming of the skirt.

The third model will doubtless be the choice of the woman who delights in rather youthful effects. This gown is made of blue gray chiffon and the long skirt, slightly plaited at the waist line, is trimmed with three narrow folds of the fabric.

The capelike corsage is outlined with bands of blue fox and rich embroideries in coral and silver lend a lovely touch of color to this exquisite gown. Down the center front an elongated tassel, or rather strands of coral tipped with silver, relieves the neutral tones of the skirt, while the narrowing train is finished with lovely embroidery and weighted with a large silver tassel.

Although skirts are longer this year, this dictate of fashion is interpreted according to the purpose for which the costume is designed. In evening gowns the soft silken fabrics are permitted to touch the instep, or even reach the floor. In the dressy suit the skirt almost hides the shoe tops, while the trotteur skirt extends nearly to the normal shoe top or an inch or two below. However, the best rule for every woman is to choose the length that is most becoming and in keeping with the purpose for which her dress is designed. The woman with the trim ankle will surely favor the shorter lengths, while those who are not blessed with daintily formed feet will gladly yield to the sway of the longer skirt.

Fur trimming promises to be one of the best liked methods of decoration this season, and many unique uses are achieved. In one interesting suit—a modified Russian suit—the lower part of the jacket is enriched with a broad band of mole about twelve inches wide, but instead of being attached flatly, the fur band looks as though it were slightly fulled on. In another smart model a narrow facing of fur is sewed on the fronts and the hem of the jacket so that a tiny line of fur appears just beyond the green tricotine from which the suit is fashioned.

MEN AND WOMEN

PHYSICAL fitness as the foundation upon which success is built was given another illustration in the young girl, Miss Anna Gold, who recently won the amateur national typewriter championship. Continual attention to her health and a course of six or seven weeks' hard training just before the tournament is the program admitted by Miss Gold to be responsible for her success.

Occasionally you hear of people afflicted with some physical defect or chronic ailment who conquer through sheer force of will, but the average person who succeeds in any big undertaking succeeds primarily because of good health.

Health Wins Success.

Strength to execute tasks, to concentrate, and to radiate sincerity and enthusiasm are the qualities which mark young men and women for promotion, and the lack of these is the thing, in the eyes of superiors, that blocks the progress of others.

"How to Be Successful Though Sickly" is the title of a book that will never make its author rich. Although this is not an age of miracles, it is the day when the knowledge of how to possess or to achieve health is so easily within the grasp of every one that failure should be more censured than pitied.

Wasted Energy.

At a recent test in the laboratory of Prof. Poffenberger of Columbia university, with the aid of the famous Dutch 'cellist, Michael Penha, it was found that a simple air played on the violoncello calls for a total expenditure of energy equal to two and three-quarters pounds per note, or more than four tons of energy for a five minute selection. This same amount of energy would carry a laborer through his entire day's work. What an appalling task would confront the scientist who would attempt to measure the energy that is wasted in your neighborhood and in mine by musicians with talent not commensurate with their ambitions?

Market Basket Cuts Living Cost.

"There's one sure way of cutting down the cost of living and saving yourself money. Do your marketing in person and don't be ashamed to carry a basket on your arm." That's the advice of a grocer. And surely he is the man who knows, if anybody does, that domestic economy lost its best friend when it "shelved" the market basket.

Ordering by telephone or by the boy who calls at your door indicates incompetent housewifery and the conduct of your household on anything but business principles. A table cannot be set economically unless the housewife personally visits the market and learns to know the market value of every single commodity she buys, when they are in season and when out of season, and how she can substitute cheaper and good foodstuffs for the out of season products.

This information the housewife does not acquire over the telephone nor through the boy who calls at her door. The possibility of underweight and overweight is eliminated in her being present at weighing. She can demand exactly what she is prepared to pay for—no more, no less. The overweight item in meat buying is no small consideration when marketing is done over the telephone.

Once it is delivered she keeps the extra 20, 40, or 50 cents' worth of meat she really did not need. In the matter of vegetables and fruits she can be sure of no waste whatever by personally inspecting before taking. With the personal buying of lettuce, for instance, she can be sure that every leaf may be utilized, whereas 'phone ordering often results in withered tiny heads, the outer layer of whose leaves are not usable.

Again, if the housewife takes a notion she wants asparagus for dinner and she follows the line of least resistance and orders by 'phone she may pay 40 or 50 cents a bunch, whereas a personal visit might have reminded her that string beans at one-half the price would be as appetizing. And so on.

"The criminal incompetence of the American housewife is mainly responsible for the high cost of living," says Mrs. Julian Heath, president of the National Housewives' league. "While men are spending thousands of dollars making their business methods more efficient, the average housewife sits complacently by, absolutely indifferent to the serious situation that confronts her. If one-half of our business men conducted their business as women do their housekeeping the country would soon be bankrupt. It is just as great a science—if, indeed, not greater—for the wife wisely to spend the money that her husband makes as it is for him to earn it."

To begin with, the average woman who runs her home is criminally ignorant of market conditions and prices. The grocer can give her any excuse for the increase in price of an article. She sighs and says it is too bad, and pays the extra money without taking the trouble to find out whether the market price really is higher or lower. Can't you imagine how long a man's business conducted on this principle would last?

The majority of women do not know the market value of a single commodity they buy. Some of them don't even know when things are in season and when they are not.

Butchers can testify to the ignorance of the average housewife. Not one in twenty-five knows the different cuts of meat. One young housewife said she could always remember where the ox-tail came from for the ox tail soup, but she never had been able to see a lamb with chops so large as those she bought.

How many women know the different grades of coffee or tea, how much a pound they are paying for produce they are buying in packages? There are a few, unfortunately only a few. And they are not the women who order over the 'phone or by boy.

Starched to Suit.

I could not launder my husband's shirts to please him. Week after week he would complain that I could not get them as stiff as the laundry did. Each week I tried to starch them a little stiffer, and finally I starched one shirt with the thickest kind of starch and spent an hour ironing the shirt. On his arrival home that evening his shirt stood in the doorway to greet him, as stiff as any board. That ended his complaining. S.

"Only 'Gets-It' for Me After This!"

It "Gets" Every Corn Every Time. Painless. Nothing More Simple.

"I'll tell you what. I've quit using toe-eating salves for corns. I've quit making a package out of my toes with bandages and contraptions—quit digging with knives and scissors. Give me "GETS-IT" every time!"

When You See These Pretty Girls in Your Druggist's Window It's a Good Time To End Your Corns.

That's what they all say the very first time they use "GETS-IT." All the time it's working—and then, that little old corn peels right off, leaves the clean, corn-free skin underneath—and your corn is gone! No wonder millions prefer "GETS-IT." Try it tonight.

Doris Blake Says

If you were born this week you are

Intuitive.

> Have you a perplexing love affair in which you need the counsel of a friend? Write Doris Blake, care "The Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply send stamped and addressed envelope.

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

If you were fortunate enough to come into the world during the week beginning Sept. 24, you can "thank your lucky stars," for the little "sky lamps" are especially kind to mortals born at this season of the year. The stars are supposed to form a shape like a scale, so the scales have come to be the symbol of Libra, and to typify impartial justice. And, too, Libra is again fortunate in being the home of these planets: Mercury, which endows one with physical power, memory, and perception; Venus, known by all as the planet of love, especially of the conjugal type; Jupiter, which brings to mortals a love of the sublime, the noble, and the beautiful, and Neptune, the planet of poetry. So again I say, you Libra born are fortunate!

Fate and the stars have also decreed that you will have a fine physique, and that almost without exception you will be handsome folk, with unusually beautiful eyes.

You are energetic, ambitious, and, withal, generous, though inclined to be careless about money matters. You just hate to get mixed up in financial transactions, and, as a result, sometimes "forget" all about bills and such matters. These are the times when the Libra scales tip in the wrong direction. And yet no one has a keener sense of justice. You will at times give away the larger half of everything you possess and never expect an equivalent.

First impressions are, nine times out of ten, correct with you, but you are apt to be mistaken in the tenth, so don't place implicit faith in your intuitive abilities. It is this characteristic foresight, however, that makes speculators of many of you and often successful ones, if you but have a care. Being thus endowed, you are not prone to reason except from the standpoint of intuition and observation, so it is usually best for you to follow your first decision in all undertakings, unless you are acting under some one else's guidance.

This same intuitive quality makes it possible for you to adapt yourself to the tastes of any one with whom you are thrown and to suit your conversation accordingly. As sympathy and tenderness go hand in hand with intuition, you have two other blessed qualities added to your already large list. You feel every change in those about you, so much so that if you enter a house where inharmony prevails you will be immediately depressed, your naturally high spirits will be subdued, and a shadow will fall upon all assembled. In this way your sympathies are kept in too constant action. If you can but use this quality and yet keep out of other people's affairs it will prove a wonderful force in your life.

You Libra women are almost invariably good housekeepers and possessed with the knack of adorning both your home and yourself in excellent taste. The poetry in your nature endows you with a love of the beautiful which makes harmonious surroundings quite necessary to your happiness. If you have ample means, absolute perfection of detail will result, but there will be no wasteful extravagance, for money put into your hands will represent its full purchasing value. Orderliness will be the slogan of your household; there will be no sluggards. If you have the entire responsibility upon your own shoulders you can be counted upon to finish anything you start in a careful, competent manner.

Affection is quite necessary to your happiness, and you adore those near to you to the point of absolute devotion. But, to be perfectly happy, you must have the same measure in return. The most congenial companionship for you will probably be found among fire people, Aries, March 22-April 20; Leo, July 23-Aug. 23, and Sagittarius, Nov. 23-Dec. 22; next with those born under your own sign, Sept. 24-Oct. 23, and lastly with those in Aquarius, Jan. 21-Feb. 19.

Your colors are crimson, black, and light blue; birthstones, opals and diamonds. The two most fortunate weeks in the year for you are those beginning April 13 and Dec. 6.

Real Love Stories

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

Asking Advice—and Taking It.

MY brief married life had not been happy, and my widowhood, after the natural burst of emotion at my husband's sudden death, did not greatly grieve me. My girl friends called to see me often, and more and more came to confide in me as one fitted by age and experience to advise them. A few even of my young bachelor friends appeared to enjoy telling me of their affairs, especially when those affairs did not run smoothly.

All this was within two years of my bereavement. Though still in my early twenties I was beginning to feel somewhat aged, as the confidante and counselor of so many young people. I was coming to think of myself as one whose own youth was past—as if

One of my regular callers was George Bronson. Though several years my senior, he never seemed to me anything but a great boy, yet I came to like him much indeed. He was not one of those who made me their mother confessor, but seemed to come solely for the pleasure of it. Many a delightful conversation did we have, on topics for the most part impersonal. He did not gossip nor pay empty compliments like the rest, but talked intelligently of literature and current events. I liked him because he was different.

One day he appeared preoccupied and less alert than usual. His replies to what I said were often irrelevant and his own remarks at times little less than incoherent. Presently I exclaimed playfully: "Why, George, what is the matter? You evidently have something on your mind. If it were any one else I should diagnose it as a love affair."

"You are right. It is a love affair," he answered, with an emphasis that left no doubt of his sincerity.

"Tell me about it. Perhaps I may be able to help you."

"I believe you will. If not, there is no one else who can."

"Well, tell me the facts in the case and let us see what I can suggest."

"Let me tell it in my own way and see if you can guess her name. She is young and beautiful——"

"Of course," I interrupted, a little satirically.

"Bright, witty, a splendid conversationalist, sweet, modest—in a word, the loveliest and most perfect woman in the world."

"You might at least, for courtesy's sake, have added the saving clause, 'present company excepted.' But I am used to these rhapsodies and am not at all jealous. What is wrong with this paragon? Has she refused you?"

"No, for I have not asked her."

"How, then, did you expect to win her, Mr. Faintheart?"

"That is what I want you to tell me. I am with her often and have come to love her with all my heart. She is so fine, so infinitely above me in every respect, that I feel it would be utter presumption to try to claim her for myself. I have a fair amount of self-conceit, too."

"I shan't stop now to deny that. But how do you hope to win her if you do not take the initiative? You surely do not expect her to fall into your arms without the asking."

"I do not fully understand either her or myself. We never have exchanged a word of affection, yet when we are together there seems to be such absolute sympathy between us that I cannot help feeling we are meant for each other. And still I dare not put my feeling into words for fear of finding myself mistaken and losing her irrevocably."

"You surely are in love, my friend. Have you never detected any slightest sign of affection for yourself in her behavior?"

"That is what perplexes me. Sometimes I think—or feel—that if I could only approach the subject right I could rouse her to consciousness of a love that is there, though still latent. It is like casting for trout—if the fisherman strike too soon he not only loses his catch for the moment but frightens away the game for good."

"What a brutal comparison! So you are trying to hook her—and offering her worms and flies for bait, I supose."

"It is a serious situation for me. I cannot let matters drift on much longer in this way, yet I'm afraid I'll bungle it if I make any move."

"Let me tell you one thing, my friend"—this in my most impressive manner—"if she really cares for you the manner of your declaration will be of infinitely less importance to her than the fact that you do speak. The day of elaborate proposals is long past, and the true woman cares for nothing but to know that she is loved by a manly man. She will wait for him to tell her, of course, but the how is a secondary consideration."

"Thank you," he said simply, rising and approaching me with outstretched hand.

"Must you go so soon?"

"I'm going to put your counsel to the test, and if I fail the guilt will rest on your head. You think that all I need do is to make her understand I love her?"

"I am sure of it." But as I saw him standing there so modest and so manly, about to carry the offer of his love to another woman, a sense of my own isolation almost overwhelmed me. Yet I controlled myself and added, giving my hand in farewell: "Indeed, if you cannot remember that beautiful speech you have prepared, just seize a moment when she seems to be in a yielding mood and catch her in your arms. She will understand, and if she really cares——"

My sentence remained forever unfinished, for the wretch acted on my suggestion and caught me in his arms! And the worst—or best—of it is that he was right.

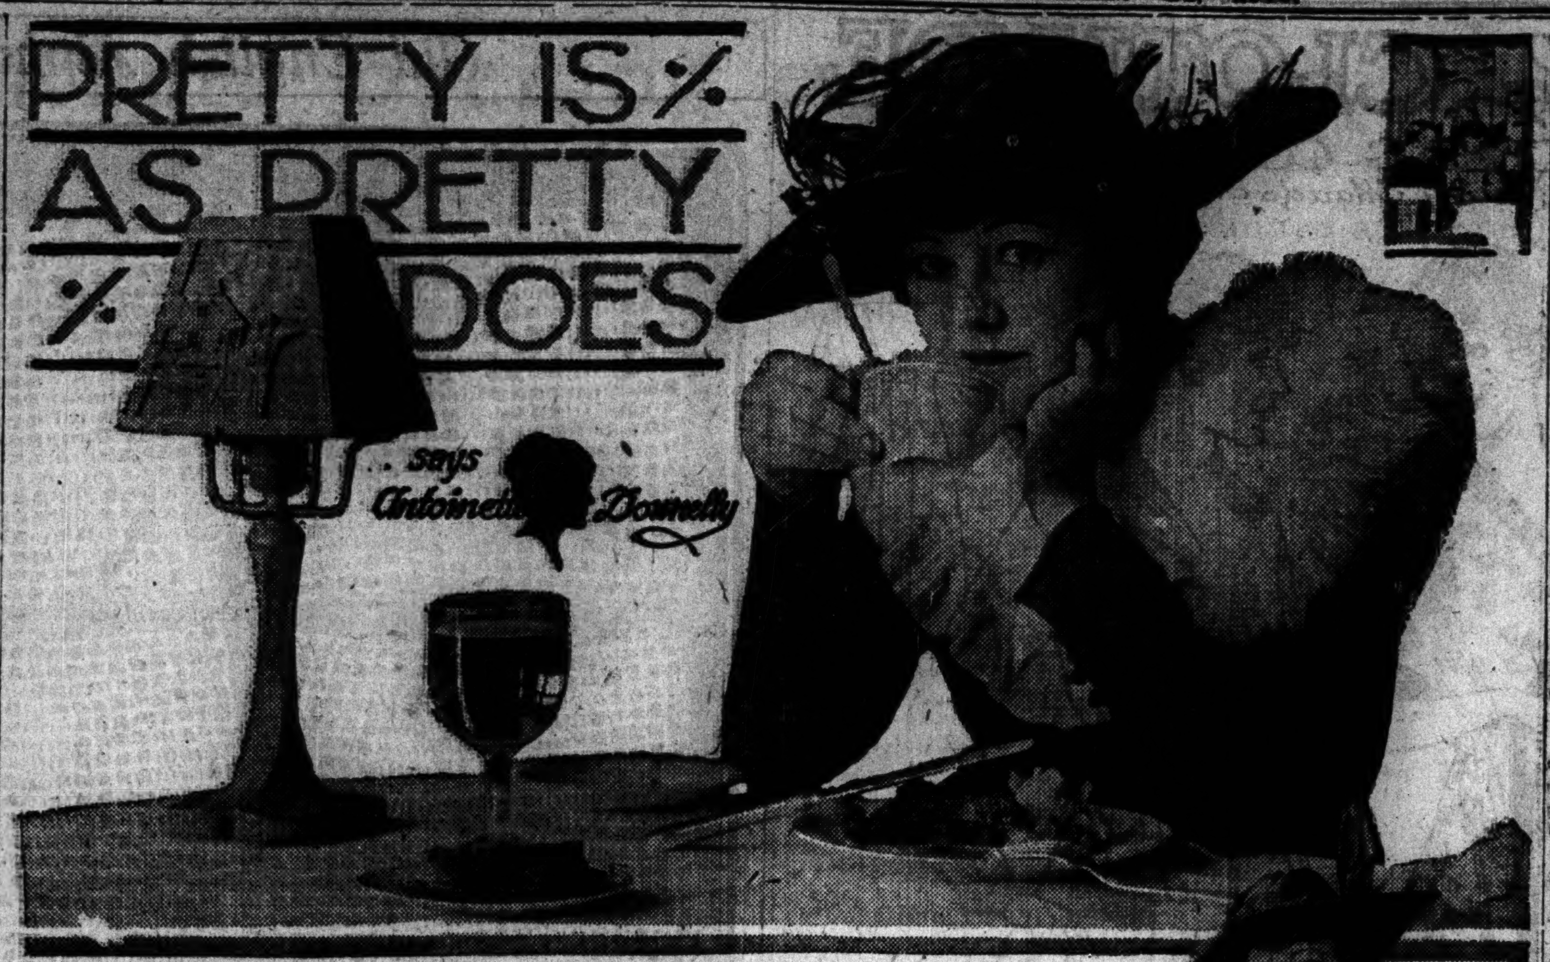
PRETTY IS AS PRETTY DOES

...says Antoinette Donnelly



The Spoon in the Cup, the Girl's Position, the Knife and Fork Position, Ill Bred and Unbecoming.

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

A PRETTY face will not excuse bad table maners. Many a girl whose looks interested a man has wondered why his attentions diminished after that first dinner or supper. Evidence of breeding adds charm to the homeliest girl in Christendom, and to the pretty one in proportion. And table manners display breeding or lack of it as nothing else does. Sometimes it is carelessness, but more often it is a lack of opportunity to know what to do and what not to do at table that makes restaurants so often the frame for unlovely "girls at table" pictures.

Below I shall give you a list of things you should and should not do if you wish to be thought well bred and pretty. Please don't think this unimportant in the making of "the woman beautiful." Well bred persons are probably unconscious of conforming to any special standard, but they are as quick to detect a lapse as the trained ear of a musician is to note a discord, and even less charitably disposed toward the offender.

At the home table reform should begin. There must be rehearsals if we would play our part acceptably on the world's stage. A boor behind the scenes never appears a gentleman before the footlights.

THINGS TO DO AND NOT TO DO.

Sit erect at table; neither lounge back nor reach forward to catch mouthfuls. A seat drawn too close to the table throws out the elbows; to sit too far away from it crooks the back. The proper compromise is a position in which the waist or chest is about eight inches from the board.

It is ungraceful to put the elbows on the table, to trifle with the knives and forks, to clink the glasses together. When not actively occupied in eating, the hands should lie quietly in the lap; for nothing so marks the well bred woman as a reposeful bearing at table.

Don't spread your napkin to its full extent over lap or chest. Unfold it once and lay it across the knee. When through the meal place it unfolded on the table.

Drink soup noiselessly from the side of the spoon and don't tip the plate to secure the last spoonful.

Don't mash food in between the prongs of the fork or turn the concave side of the fork up and load it with food, lifting the whole, shovelwise, into the mouth.

The knife is used for cutting, never for conveying food to the mouth. The fork is shifted to the right hand, when the knife is laid aside, and utilized for passing food to the mouth.

It is extremely bad grace to hold knife or fork in the air when the plate is passed for a second helping, or, when pausing in the process of eating, to rest the knife or fork on the plate's edge with handle on the cloth, as illustrated in large picture on this page. When not in active service, knife and fork remain side by side on the right hand side of the plate.

Fish, meats, vegetables, and salads are eaten with a fork. Oysters, clams, lobster, and terrapin are fork foods.

Lettuce leaves are not cut with a knife. They are either broken or folded up with the fork and lifted to the mouth.

Asparagus may be held between the fingers and dipped in the sauce and bitten off, if the stalks are too slender or pliant, or it may be divided and eaten with the fork.

Artichokes may also be eaten in the fingers, plucking the leaves off one by one. The heart is cut and eaten with a fork.

Green corn on the cob should be broken so as to be small enough to be held conveniently in one hand.

Never bite off mouthfuls of bread from a large piece or cut it with a knife. Break it as needed in pieces the size of a mouthful and spread butter on these small bits.

Cake is eaten after the manner in which bread is disposed of or with a fork.

Plums, grapes, etc., are eaten one by one, and when the pits are ejected they are dropped from the lips directly into the half closed hand and so transferred to the plate.

Chicken, game, and chop bones under no circumstances are to be taken up in the fingers.

A last and elusive morsel of food should never be pursued about a plate and finally pushed upon the fork by the assisting touch of the finger. A bit of bread may be utilized for the purpose.

A mouthful of meat, vegetables, or dessert should never be taken up with fork or spoon and held in midair while conversation is carried on. As soon as food is lifted from the plate it should be put into the mouth. No one should require to be told not to talk while masticating. It is distressing to others seated at table with you.

Drawing upon the tablecloth, toying absentmindedly with the table furniture, and crumbling one's bread are forms of nervousness and ill breeding that should be controlled.

The habit of resting the arms on the table and bending the head to drink from cup or glass, or lifting a small plate from the table while eating from it, and of holding the fork in the left hand while loading it with food with the knife, are awkward and provincial. One uses a fork always with the right hand except when that member holds the knife to cut the food. Only sufficient food should be placed upon the fork or spoon to be taken with ease into the mouth, which should not receive more than half the bowl of a spoon or tines of a fork.

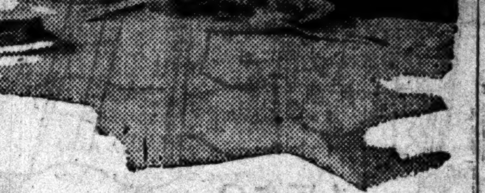
Drinking from a cup while the spoon is in it is an unpardonable offense against good breeding. Never allow a spoon to stand in a coffee, tea, or bouillon cup while drinking from it. Just stir the liquids once or twice (vigorous stirring is bad taste), sip a spoonful to test the temperature, and then lay the spoon on the saucer to drink the remainder directly from the cup.

To dip up a spoonful of soup and blow upon it is ill becoming to grownups. Dip the soup with an outward motion rather than by drawing the spoon toward one. Liquids are imbibed from the side, not the end, of the spon.

A litle rubbing together of the finger tips without stirring up or splashing the water about is enough to cleanse them in a finger bowl.

To eat slowly and quietly is an evidence of respect for one's health and personal charm. Bolting food, striking the spoon, fork, or glass rim against the teeth, sucking up liquid from a spoon, clashing knife or fork against the plate, scraping the bottom of cup or plate for the last morsel, and masticating with the mouth open are all serious offenses that weigh against the personal charm of the offender.

In a restaurant it is unnecessary to scrape up a bit of butter or fragment of food from the tablecloth where it has fallen beside the plate. That's the waiter's duty.



Use of a Toothpick Should Be Confined to a Place of Privacy.

None but the hopeless provincial and vulgarian uses a toothpick in public after a meal.

Pointing with knife, fork, or spoon to emphasize conversation is most unbecoming to a pretty girl. Don't do it. A charming girl will at all times conduct herself in public in a manner to escape observation rather than to attract it. She will converse in quiet, well bred tones—no loud, boisterous laughing or giggling.

The Girl Next Door.

It was a beautiful summer day and I was strolling along the boulevard when suddenly it began to pour. Having on a good suit for the first time, I of course did not care to have it ruined. Slipping into a doorway, I turned up the cuffs of my trousers high, and you can imagine my embarrassment when I collided with the young lady next door, of whom I was particularly fond, and heard her "O! O!"

The Hidden Delicacy.

While my husband was doing some review work in one of the medical schools in New York my little 8 year old daughter and I joined him in a few days and lived in a furnished apartment house.

We had invited Dr. Mills to take dinner with us the Fourth of July. Doctor was an old classmate of my husband, but a stranger to me.

The lady across the hall was nice to us, and came in bringing three pieces of spring chicken for us before the two men arrived.

I ate mine, and handing a piece to my daughter I said:

"Here is yours, and we will give this to daddy, but of course not till Dr. Mills leaves."

Imagine how I felt when at the dinner table my little girl said excitedly: "O, daddy, we have some chicken for you, but mother said we couldn't give it to you till after Mr. Mills leaves."

We had roast beef for dinner.

The Bumping Cabbage.

One afternoon, coming from the grocery, I passed a picture show. The picture then playing attracted me greatly, so I went in, although I had a good many packages, one of which was a small cabbage—one of those hard, firm ones.

The picture proved thrilling and in my interest I forgot all about the packages on my lap. Suddenly the cabbage went bump-a-bump-a-bump, bump-a-bump-a-bump-a-bump down the aisle and hit the railing of the balcony. Everybody was laughing at me, and, to complete my embarrassment, the usher went to fetch the cabbage and handed it to me, saying: "This your's, madam?"

I was forced to take it, but the picture had lost all interest for me. I hurried out as fast as I could.

Enough to Flag the Ferry.

An unusually fine yacht sailed in at our harbor at our swimming hour. As I had what I considered an attractive bathing suit I wished to exhibit my best dive. I waited for the psychological moment, but as my calculations were not exact I hung suspended. Consequently I waded down the beach a few blocks to come in out of the water. Enough bathing suit remained on the spring board to flag the ferry.

Mistrusts Her Own Judgment.

MANY working women of ability who hold confidential positions and are capable of handling the affairs of their employers with tact and discretion are sometimes strangely at a loss to take care of a situation or settle a problem in which they are personally interested, no matter how remote their interest happens to me.

The letter which follows is a striking example of the unwillingness of an evidently capable working woman to trust her own judgment about an affair in which she feels personally concerned:

"Dear Miss King: Six months ago I secured a position for a young friend of mine in the same firm where I am employed as secretary to the president. Her work consists in keeping the files in order; not much of a job, but a good opening for an inexperienced girl who has had no business training and has no special ability.

"The office manager, who 'stands in' highly with all the officials and who seems to have their utmost confidence, has for some time been paying considerable attention to my little friend. I was a little worried about this at first, but she spoke so frankly and enthusiastically of his kindness to her that I paid little attention to it. However, he has lately raised her salary out of all proportion to the work she does, and the other morning I went into the office and found this man leaning over her desk and talking to her in a low tone. They both started when they saw me and looked rather confused.

"I took her out to luncheon and asked her to tell me what he had to say to her. I told her he was married, which surprised her, and she confessed that she had been receiving gifts of flowers, candy, etc., every day. Then she told me that her salary was to be raised again, and when she mentioned the amount I was startled, as it was more than I was receiving after my six years of service in the most important position the firm had to offer a woman! She begged me to keep the matter of her raise a secret, as the manager had warned her to tell no one.

"I went to the man and asked him to cease his attentions to my friend, but he told me to mind my own business.

"I have been terribly worried ever since. I know it is necessary for this girl to work, and I am afraid to advise her to give up the position, as I know she will have a hard time getting another.

"The matter of the salary seems suspicious to me, as I am sure that this unusual increase has never been O. K.'d by any member of the firm.

"Do you think I am justified in taking this matter up with the president of the firm? I hate to carry tales about any of my fellow workers, more especially about a man who seems to be a trusted and respected employé.

"I am distracted about the affair. I am afraid for my friend, and I suspect this man is dishonest with the firm. There is no one I can talk to about this, and I thought a word from you might help me decide what to do. L. DEW."

You would be entirely justified in taking the matter up with your employer, but before doing so you would better satisfy yourself beyond doubt that your protégée has not misrepresented the fact about her increased salary. A young girl unused to attention from older men might have her head turned a bit and exaggerate the circumstances. If your suspicions are not allayed, after your investigation, you ought to speak to your employer, so that he might settle the matter to his own satisfaction. It would be better for your friend to lose her position than to remain under such equivocal circumstances.

New Discovery Makes Superfluous Hairs Vanish

The fashions of today have made the removal of hairs from arms, under arms and ankles an absolute necessity. Women who are afflicted with these unsightly growths will find it one of the easiest things to do to remove these superfluous hairs. It is no longer a problem or a danger. The newly discovered removes these hairs by dissolving them. It does not burn the hairs off like pastes and powders do. It is easy to use, will remove the coarsest hairs and soft "down" or "fuzz" in a few minutes, and it will not harm the most delicate skin. It is the most scientific hair remover ever discovered. Sulfo Solution is sold by all drug and department stores at $1.00 per bottle, or direct by mail from the [illegible] Pharmacal Co., [illegible] Thompson Building, Chicago, Ill.

Vacation Away from Mate.

Ever go on a vacation without your wife or husband? Would you do it again? Would you advise any married person to do it? If not, why not? Write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned. "The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published. Address Doris Blake, "Chicago Tribune."

Days Wonderful; Nights Nightmares

Janet and I had been married seven years when this summer came. With the coming of the warm spell we seemed to irritate each other—not always, but frequently. So I took my vacation alone. Janet looked hurt when I told her, but I went just the same.

The days were wonderful. I sailed—Janet hates sailing—I fished, and I slept under the trees when I wasn't swimming. Yes, the days were great—but, great grief, the nights!

Now, I'm not altogether a mess as men go, and so I like the social arts. I like to get out on the dance floor and feel the poetry of motion, even if the usual summer resort cornist slights the matter of meter now and then. But there wasn't any one to dance with except two simpering girls in the Chambers and bonbon period and a middle aged woman whose proudest boast was that she did the finest hemstitching in her town. Those nights became nightmares from which the day only brought relief.

Days I never thought of Janet, but at sunset I swore that I'd simply have to have her up. Lonely? Say, I was so lonely that I almost took up hemstitching!

I stuck it out, though, the whole two weeks, and when I got home I found the mail box stuffed with letters—my letters to Janet. For Janet was vacationing herself. When she got home she said: "Mine was great; how was yours?"

"Bully," I said.

Liars!

Never Again.

I tried it alone and I had a fine time up there in the Wisconsin woods, the dells, and lakes, but when I got home! Zowie! The door was locked, the blinds were down. No one answered my insistent ringing and knocking, and my door key lay at the bottom of Indian lake, the result of an unfortunate maneuver I had made up there while in a canoe. It took me an hour and a half of heated exertion, worry, and irritation to find a locksmith and have the door broken into, and then I found a note, stinging in brevity:

"Lonely. Taking vacation, too. See you later. WIFE."

For three weeks thereafter I had the pleasure of engaging in the manifold duties of cooking, dishwashing, bed making, and other abstruse household arts, in all of which I am less skilled than in bookkeeping (and the boss considers me worth only $20 per week at that). And lonely—Oh!

Well, finally she returned. When she got into the house and found half of her best china had been broken, the glasses, what were left of them, chipped, roaches and mice having a mardi gras, and the general condition of the house, especially the kitchen, in dilapidation, she, too, said never again would she vacation alone. So we embraced and vowed then and there to spend all future vacations together.

MARION HARLAND'S HELPING·HAND by MARION HARLAND

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

When an address or other information is wanted by mail a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send parcels to the office.

"HAS any one a twin baby carriage that is not in use or for which I could offer some exchange? I would be glad to pay express upon such a carriage if I could get it. MRS. S. A. G."

Twin baby carriages are not common enough to warrant me in holding out much encouragement to this correspondent. At the same time it is quite possible that some one may have just what she wishes.

Quilt Pieces Wanted.

"I have six little children and I am so poor in health that I am not able to buy quilt pieces. Can some one please send me some? B. W."

This request will, I hope, meet with a generous response. Write for the address of B. W. and send her some. Do not send parcels to the newspaper office.

For Children and Home.

"I am married and have three children, a boy of 9, a girl of 8, and another boy of 4. I am anxious to have my home and children well dressed, but my husband has been a cripple for over two years. If any one has curtains or other articles I could use I would be glad to pay charges on sending them. I have several books, also silk pieces, I would be glad to give. MRS. D. O. G."

I hope for applications for the address of Mrs. D. O. G.

Mail for the H. H. C.

"I always have been interested in the work of the Corner, but never have been able to take part in it until lately; but now that I feel somewhat a part of it, will you let me make a suggestion? Don't you think you should publish somewhere on the page instructions on how correspondents are to write to you? For a long time I hesitated about writing, for I didn't know where to send the letter. I suppose you have printed the direction some time ago, but there may be others, like myself, who do not know. A. D. B."

The manner in which to direct to me is simply to the care of THE TRIBUNE. Judging from the number of letters I get, I do not believe there is a general uncertainty as to how to address the letters, but I am glad to receive the suggestion and to give the information.

Fits Glasses Free.

"In a recent issue of the Helping Hand Corner I again noticed a call for glasses by 'An Old Cornerite.' If the worthy Cornerite is within easy access of my office, kindly hand her my address and tell her that I will carefully examine her eyes and then fit her glasses free of charge. I would make this an open invitation to all worthy Cornerites in need of my services, but I hope that you will make it clear to them that glasses are not like soap: they will not serve their purpose without regard to where they are applied. Eyes vary, and seldom do the two eyes in the one head agree in refractive power; how, then, can any discarded glasses which have been fitted especially to one pair of eyes suit any other pair of eyes that may happen along? Eyes are not to be trifled with, for glasses not properly fitted may do more harm than none at all. M. N. L."

The request of "Old Cornerite" has been answered favorably from another source, and I print this generous offer for the benefit of those who may need glasses. I wish to emphasize as strongly as I can the statement of M. N. L. that the discarded glasses of one person may not suit the eyes of another, and that the vision is often seriously injured by the use of glasses purchased or given at random. I recognize how hard this must seem to those who cannot afford to have their glasses fitted to them, but the risk of impaired sight is too serious to be run by any one who can possibly seek the services of an oculist. The liberal kindliness of this friend should help some who have no other means of getting the glasses which meet their needs. I do not have to state, I hope, that only those who are unable to pay for an examination of their eyes should ask his aid.

Free Instruction to Needy Child.

"If you have the name on your books of any child who cannot go to school on account of physical misfortune and whose parents cannot afford to pay for private instruction, will you be so kind as to send me that name? I will endeavor to teach him or her, but the residence must be on the north side of the city. I have four Guatemala stamps that may be acceptable to a stamp collector. M. P."

Parents who desire to avail themselves of this offer will write for the address of M. P. Collectors will be quick to see the value of the foreign stamps.

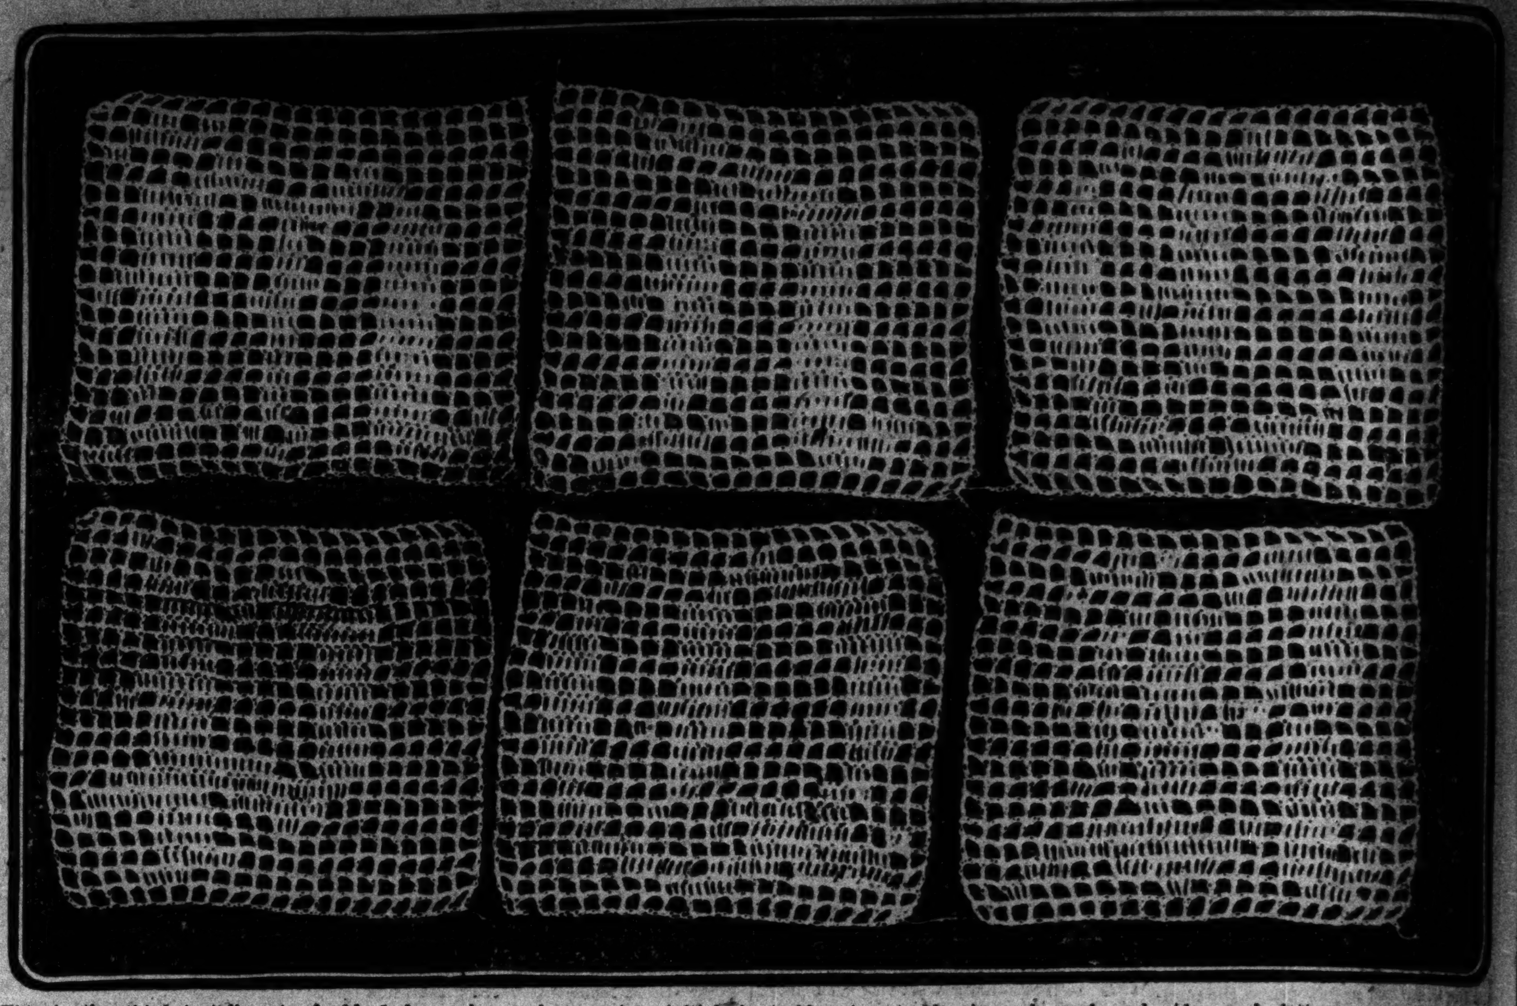
Old English Alphabet in Filet Crochet.



This is the third installment of old English alphabet in filet crochet. The remainder of the alphabet will be published next Sunday. This alphabet should prove invaluable for the needlewoman who is already beginning to make her Christmas presents.

These letters have many uses and may find a place wherever an initial is needed. They have been used for towels, handkerchiefs, pillow cases, baby's dress, or the central design of a yoke.

As most needleworkers know, filet is a lace made up of open squares or meshes, and the design in crochet is worked out by filling the meshes with trebles, two trebles in each mesh and one treble over each treble.

Begin each letter with a chain of 45, turn with 5 ch., and divide the long chain into twenty meshes. In the second row the form of the letter begins. These designs admit of no errors, each space should be filled exactly as shown.

If the plan is not perfectly clear, consider each letter a square of meshes twenty by twenty. With a pencil draw and divide this square, filling in spaces with dark shading outlining the letter desired, following the illustration until the drawing is perfect.

The crocheting can then be commenced intelligently, and there will be no errors.

THE TRIBUNE COOK BOOK.

Edited by JANE EDDINGTON.

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

WITH the first chill of autumn the mind instinctively turns from the cool and watery green vegetables and fruits to cooked dishes of the more substantial or staple crops of field and orchard. Baked beans seem particularly good. An Indian pudding seems pleasanter than watermelon. A pea soup seems agreeably substantial and filling. A warm cereal of the coarser sort ought to be more acceptable than a cold one, but we have become somewhat depraved in this respect.

This is the time of year when dried beans and peas make dishes of the finest flavor. Of course, one has to be a great lover of these dishes, and have these legumes cooked in the most perfect ways to notice this fineness.

There is reason enough why the new crop should have a more delicate flavor than the old. The bean, for instance, contains more of its own sun distilled water than it will six months hence. The new beans often contain 50 per cent more water than the old, or up to 15 per cent. This seems to be a small water content as compared with that of the fresh bean, which is a good deal more than half water.

For those who can afford little meat the bean is a great boon. The skin is too purely cellulose to digest, but may always be sifted. More of the digestible part of the bean is undoubtedly utilized by digestion when beans are mashed through a strainer. Purees thick for vegetable or thinned for soup are much more agreeable, as they are soft and gracious, to the taste than are unstrained beans, even when cooked to perfection. The skin of the bean which is baked all night will give less trouble than one cooked but for three hours.

Long cooking of beans undoubtedly makes their starch content more digestible, but it may make their protein content less so. Hard boiling always lessens the food value of the protein a great deal, since this is the same thing as that which makes meat stiff and hard when hard boiled.

One of our greatest authorities on foods, Prof. Sherman, remarks that though legumes have been a staple article of diet from ancient times they have always been considered indigestible, but that "this impression is based more upon consciousness of the digestive process than upon measurements of actual losses in digestion."

It is probably more common for the city housewife of today to lay in supplies of the new pack of canned goods than of the staples just harvested. This can never be done in the interests of economy if she has time to cook, for canned beans contain more water than fresh beans, and are that much less substantial. Canned Lima beans, for instance, contain from 75.7 to 83.9 per cent water, and their average food value per pound is 360 calories, while a pound of dried Lima beans averages 1,625 calories. One-half this pound well cooked at the slightest expense will equal two small cans or more, and consider the difference in cost! A great number of people need to learn the difference between something to eat and food.

Dried vegetables have in some cases risen considerably in price, and the prospect is that they may rise still more, so it is a good plan to lay in a good supply right now, or just as soon as the new crop comes to market, at which time it is usually at the lowest price. Nowadays it is easy to buy direct from grower. By the way, we might almost include onions in this new crop, for at this season of the year dried onions are often obtainable at a great saving, and, if looked over now and then, will keep a long time in a cool place.

It is more than likely that we are to hear a great deal about high prices in the next few months, and whether we do or not it is forehanded to buy foods at the season when they are best and least expensive.

Those who can visit county fairs can lay in a considerable part of the winter's breakfast food for a small family if they will buy a bushel of wheat. Boiling in a breakfast cereal has a more delicious flavor than cooked whole wheat. And as to food value it is bread and meat in one. It has bran, too, in a more reasonable proportion, that is, a nature's proportion, than we get in bran bread and muffins.

Leftover Lima Beans.

Leftover beans of any sort are good just warmed up, a few tablespoons of cream making them soft and delicious, but a soup that is rather French and economical is made of the leftover beans put through a sieve or strainer and added to a liquid made by cooking celery tops and coarse stalks. Since the bean grains sink it is best to thicken such a soup a little, and a level teaspoon per cup of granulated tapicoa may be used for this purpose. If flour is used instead the soup should be stirred and cooked for at least twenty minutes after it is added. It will take about fifteen to cook the tapioca, and it makes a softer thickening. A little milk or cream finishes this soup well.

Lima Beans in Milk.

Pick over one cup of lima beans and wash them well. If old stock see that the skin is unbroken. Weevils like beans as they like almost every conceivable thing that has any starch in it, and it is no warrant that beans have not harbored weevils, because you have just purchased them from the grocery.

There is no need of soaking the beans if you will cook them over a tiny fire. Put to cook in four cups of cold water and add to them one carrot scraped and sliced and one or two small onions. Bring to boil slowly and cook tight covered over simmering burner or over small burner turned to the lowest stage. A three or four quart kettle is best for this amount, as the water will boil out of one smaller.

Well seasoned with butter and salted a bit these are good as a vegetable, but they are richer and finer if most of the liquid is dried out and milk added to take its place and the beans cooked in it gently for fifteen minutes or so. This is an excellent way to finish beans if by chance the water cooks away entirely, at the last, and the odor reminds you that the beans are sticking on. Pour out at once into frying pan, add milk, and cook, finishing with butter.

Parched Corn.

Though Thanksgiving time is the time when we eat parched corn for sentimental reasons, the autumn is a good time to eat it for health reasons.

Pick over a cup of sweet corn, put it in a strainer, set the strainer in a bowl, and pour over the corn boiling water to cover. Let stand five minutes, drain for fifteen, then wipe dry with a coarse towel and parch in one tablespoon of butter in a castiron frying pan over the gas turned rather low. Stir almost constantly for twenty minutes, when it should be evenly and thoroughly browned and puffed so that some grains will pop a little. Drain on blotting paper and sprinkle lightly with salt.

Eat the same day as parched and give your jaws good exercise over it. You may put it through a coffee mill and eat as a cereal.

Somersetshire Frumenty.

This is a dish used through several hundred years and still used in England and Scotland.

To a quart of ready boiled wheat add by degrees two quarts of new milk, breaking the jelly [it is possible to cook any starchy thing so that it will jelly; oatmeal does, cooked in the fireless overnight]. Then add four ounces of currants, picked clean and washed. Stir and boil until these are cooked. Beat the yolks of three eggs with two or three tablespoons of milk and a little nutmeg; add this to the wheat; stir together over fire, but not to boiling point. Sweeten to taste and serve, cold or it may be eaten warm.

Divide recipe by three for small family. Omit the currants if you choose. I have tried this dish and consider it an excellent alternative to rice pudding and one richer in all the food elements by far. It is good for child or man.

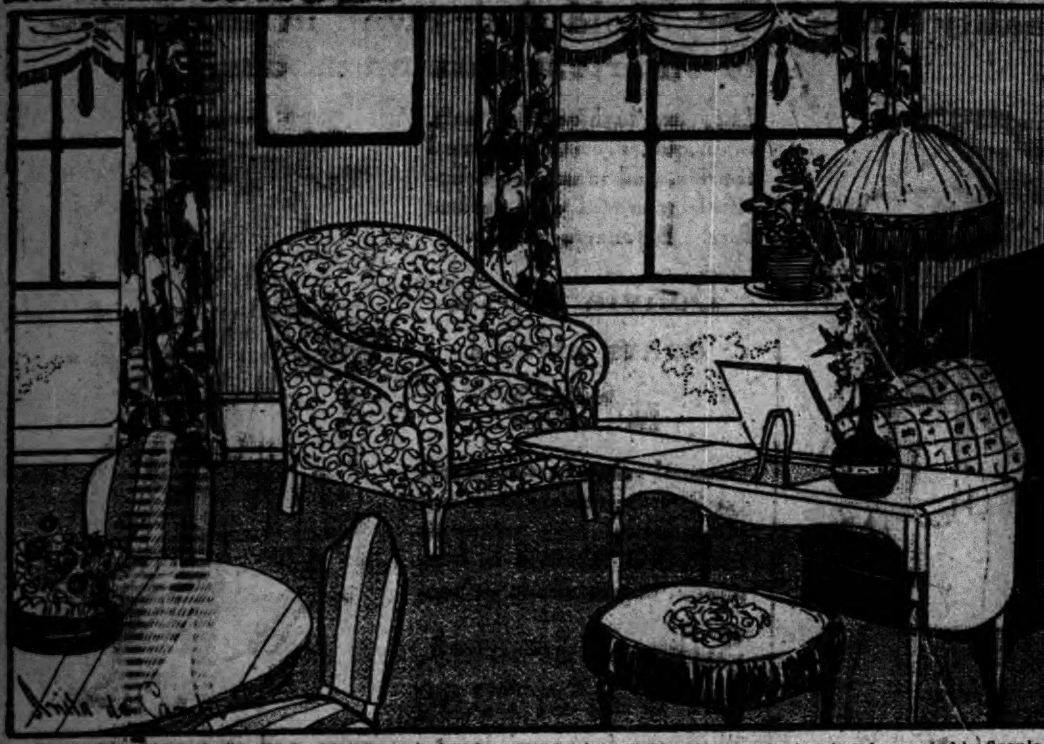
WALNUT LEADS AS POPULAR WOOD

Anita de Campi



Miss de Campi will be glad to assist the home maker in any problems pertaining to interior decorations. Address your letter to Miss Anita de Campi, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago. Inclose a stamped, addressed envelope if you wish a personal reply.

INTERESTING indeed are some of the model rooms designed for exhibition by many of the leading decorators and furniture manufacturers. These are calculated to show to selling advantage the new types of furniture, some of which are really charming. A marked improvement in factory made furniture is noticeable within the last year or two. Copies of artistic pieces, carefully executed, and upholstered in excellent taste, are brought within the means of buyers who appreciate beauty of line and finish and yet who cannot afford the cost of hand done work.

Beyond all question the most popular wood of the day is walnut. It has entirely superseded mahogany in the public fancy. French walnut is an exquisite medium shade of brown. Italian walnut is lighter, and American walnut darker. In the American walnut many lovely and inexpensive articles are to be had.

Next to walnut, enamel is most popular. Enameling is done now in any tint to order at a price that competes with home work. Enameled furniture is often bought undecorated and the decorating added at home. This plan is especially commended for girls' bedrooms and for sunrooms. The decorations can then be made to match some design in the fabric used for curtains or covers.

Brown mahogany is greatly admired. Many people who have tired of the real red tint of their old mahogany furniture are having it done over in dull finish brown and a great deal of new mahogany is given a brown instead of the more familiar red filler.

The question is often asked whether it is best to select sets of furniture for various rooms or odd pieces. That depends upon the rooms to be furnished. A bedroom that is to be used strictly as a bedroom and not as a combination bedroom and living room is undeniably neater for being furnished with a set. It takes on a trim air of repose. Formal reception rooms, too, have the fact of their formality pronounced by the use of a set. Usage sanctions sets in dining rooms, but in all combined rooms, such as living room dining room, library-living room, etc., a selection of odd pieces gives a pleasing easy air of informality.

Finely woven and antique finished cane work is now a feature of good factory furniture. Caned pieces are to be found in living room supplies. A trim little Adam settee has a cane back. Cane insets are put at the back of small consoles, also into the heads and foots of beds.

In a series of model showrooms the kitchen was furnished in blue and gray enamel and a pot of marigolds was placed on the window ledge. There were two single bedrooms and a double bedroom.

The double bedroom was furnished in Queen Anne furniture in walnut. At the foot of each twin bed was a narrow bench. In the rooms were a dressing table, a large dresser, and a chest of drawers with a separate toilet mirror on it and a chaise longue with cane inset and loose pad of silk velour. There were also a low backed combing chair, a rocker, and an extra chair. The floor was covered with a carpet of golden taupe, and on it was a great white bearskin rug. The coverlets were of silk brocade of cross woven taupe and old blue. The side lights had shield shades in Japanese pink. At the windows were white net glass curtains and inside draperies of oriental chintz.

A small bedroom done in a black lacquered set was effective. The flowers painted on it were in brilliant hues. The floor was carpeted in gray. The side walls were dull gold color, and the curtains were in wide stripes of saffron and gray, with a little line of black dividing them. On a settee at one side were a number of soft cushions in old gold, saffron, peacock green, and black. The candle shades were peacock green trimmed with narrow gilt lace. On a small table was a vase of oxblood enamel.

The adjoining small bedroom was furnished in dull green-gray enamel, against a parchment colored wall. The gray curtains in this room were marked with blocked flowers in pale pumpkin color and in deep orange red, with dull green leaves and stems, and here and there a tiny flower in white and in purple. A hair line of lavender trimmed all the edges of the gray furniture.

All of the bedrooms were rather stiff in their arrangement, but the living room looked as though it might really be lived in. It was a dining-living room combination, and it was furnished in the most unusual way with an assortment of pieces which, though quite miscellaneous, harmonized comfortably. The dining table was round, and the set of chairs had oval topped backs upholstered in wide striped velvet.

The Jacobean armchair, shown at the right in the sketch, was made more completely comfortable by the proximity of a soft footstool and cunning drop-end reading table, with its adjustable book rack. Toward the window was a loungy looking English tub chair upholstered in tapestry and fitted with a big loose cushion. The floor lamp had a compo standard of antique gold. The lamp shade was of cloth of gold over a lining of old rose. It was heavily fringed and trimmed with a band of gold galloon embroidered in black chenille.

On the other side of the room, unseen in the sketch, was a big fireplace flanked by a pair of fireside benches. There were also a great sofa with squab cushions, a writing table, a gateleg table, and an armchair. At each window a dropleaf of wood was hinged to the window sill. This is a detail that is easily copied, and that conveniently takes the place of small extra tables.

One thing is certain, and that is that the prejudice against factory furniture is passing away as fast as is the prejudice against ready made clothes, and the reason of it is that makers, realizing that women are educating themselves to an appreciation of better things, see the necessity of making the supply equal to the demand, not only in quantity but in quality as well.

MRS. J. E. B.: I am sorry that I cannot buy your crochet work. However, if I hear of any one who wishes such work I shall be glad to let you know. I am keeping your address on file.

MRS. A. S.: Furnish your parlor in the style of a living room, having in it a day bed, one or two small tables, one or two upholstered chairs, a bookcase, a small writing desk, or writing table. I should think that you could have some of your old pieces reupholstered.

MRS. R. H. R.: With the things that you have, I do not believe either a bright orange or old rose would be as effective as an amber or an old gold silk shade. Use chintz over drapes, showing through the design some old gold, a little black, green and a touch of old rose.

MISS R. N.: Cozy corners, dens, etc., are not as popular as they have been. It is well to furnish your corner in some practical, comfortable way. Tell me just what furniture you have and perhaps this will enable me to advise you as to what to discard and what to add to make your room attractive.

More than "Skin Deep."

GOOD manners are much more than a thin veneer to be hastily spread on when in society and removed while in the bosom of one's family.

It is important always to be as polite to one's mother or father or other relations at all times as to Mrs. Smith or Mrs. Jones, when she comes to call.

Well bred people are perfectly sincere in their courtesy towards others. If not inborn, it is at least so deeply ingrained as to be a vital part of their natures. They must feel and think kindly before they can attain that natural air of perfect politeness that is so desirable.

Unlike beauty, good manners can never be "only skin deep."

W. L.: Lettuce, bacon, French fried potatoes, and fried parsnips should be eaten with the fork. Both dry and buttered toast should be broken before it is eaten.

* *

MRS. B.: Gloves should be worn to and from the theater, but it is permissible to remove them during the performance. Your daughter, if she is under 21 years of age, could hardly attend the theater at night with a man, unchaperoned, but if you know and approve of the young man she could go with him alone to the matinée.

* *

L. S.: The wedding announcements, with the "at home" cards inclosed, should be sent out immediately after the wedding, if possible; not later than the following morning, anyway. At an afternoon wedding the bridegroom wears a morning coat, gray striped trousers, a white shirt, gray waistcoat, tie, gloves, and socks of the same hue, and patent leather shoes. If the bride's father is not living, and she has no near male relatives, her mother may give her away.

MRS. D.: It is better to write a formal note regretting the wedding and reception than to send your card. At other receptions cards would be correct, but a wedding is more ceremonious. When you call on a married woman you should have two of your husband's cards and one of your own; when on a widow or an unmarried woman, leave one of yours and one of your husband's.

MRS. G.: Americans are the only people who serve butter at dinner and the fashionables who are cognizant of European customs do not do it. But the majority of our countrymen serve bread and butter at dinner, and when they do they use bread and butter plates and butter knives. The butter is served on these individual plates, but this does not do away with the use of the butter knife.

H. M.: The bridegroom does not pay for the hall or the music for the wedding reception. The bride's parents give both the wedding and the reception, and any expenses for either are defrayed by them.

* *

G. M.: Bread and rolls should always be broken before they are buttered or eaten. Any one who will take a bite from a whole slice of bread runs the risk of being called "a bread and butter miss."

The AMATEUR GARDENER

by Eben E. Rexford

All questions relating to the cultivation of gardens will be answered if addressed to the Amateur Gardener, "The Tribune," Chicago. Please write on one side of the paper only.

Some Questions Answered.

MRS. D. DECKER: Your query is somewhat out of my line. Surely you can get the information you want from some market gardener. Don't be afraid to ask. Gardeners are obliging people, you will find, and always glad and willing to do a favor.

* *

J. E. T.: Cuttings from nearly all trees and shrubs, if taken at the right season, will root and become independent plants. But don't depend on growing either in that way. It is far cheaper in the long run to purchase good strong plants. If you want to read up on shrubs send for the catalogues of the larger dealers and study up on the matter during the winter.

ECZEMA ON NECK SPREAD OVER HANDS

In Blisters. Itching and Burning Were Intense. Could Not Sleep. Caused Severe Pain.

HEALED BY CUTICURA SOAP AND OINTMENT

"Eczema broke out in places on my neck and hands and later it was clear around my neck and it spread over my hands. It was in the form of blisters and the itching and burning were so intense that I had to scratch all the time and I could not sleep well nights. It caused quite severe pain and I could not put my hands in water or do my regular work, and my hands were badly inflamed.

"Then I heard of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and started to use them. After three or four days my neck and hands did not itch and burn so and it only took two cakes of Cuticura Soap and three boxes of Cuticura Ointment to heal me." (Signed) Miss Anna Giesielski, Independence, Iowa, Feb. 19, 1916.

A small son of a neighbor was showing off before a little girl guest as they played in the back yard. "See me," he cried as he started to climb over the fence. "I'm a fine climber." Just then he slipped and fell, but, undaunted, cried triumphantly. "Gee, an' I'm a fine faller, too!" J. W. O.

A Rare Luxury.

Though I was only 24 years old, I was chaperoning a beach party given by boys and girls whose ages ranged from 16 to 18 years.

All evening long the chic young girls snubbed me, but when it came time to eat and they laid out their redhots and cookies and other "beach eats" the coffee was abominable. Unable to swallow it and noticing expressions of misery on several boyish faces, I jumped up, emptied the coffee pot, and proceeded to make some real coffee. There were no eggs, but from the beach to a nearby delicatessen was a short run for a handsome lad of 19, who noticed me for the first time in the evening when he offered to get the necessary egg.

From that time on this boy, seeming to forget the discrepancy in our ages, "rushed" me as he would any girl in his class at school. I married him on his twenty-third birthday, and he says it was my delicious coffee that won him, for from the moment he tasted it he kept thinking what a luxury it would be to have a cup of it for breakfast every morn-

MILITIA MOBILIZATION.

By Floyd P. Gibbons.

"The Tribune" herewith presents an uncensored survey of the militia mobilization by its correspondent, Floyd P. Gibbons, who accompanied Villa on his last Mexican campaign, who rode with Gen. Pershing on the American punitive expedition, who went with Sibley and Langhorne on the second Mexican invasion, and who has made a study of the United States militia.

[Copyright: 1916: By Floyd P. Gibbons.]

WITHOUT a single man killed in action, without a single engagement with an enemy, without the firing of a hostile shot, the armed civilian forces of the United States numbering approximately 100,000 men, have been drawn up in more or less military array along the nation's border for more than two months. These American citizens left their many homes and families, their jobs, stores, and factories, when war was in the air. A national crisis was at hand—or at least everybody was led to believe that it was. In each troop train that hurried borderward guardsmen were hoping and praying that hostilities would not begin until they had reached the firing line.

It was a glorious sight for those who believed that the bugle blast from the porte cochere of the White House and "a million men would spring to arms."

It was a disheartening spectacle but at the same time an "I told you so" demonstration for those who believe in the democracy of universal military service, big navy, and unquestioning support of American rights by force, anywhere, any time, anyhow.

It is a matter of suspended judgment for another and larger class, which subscribes to neither of the extreme doctrines of the pacifist or the militarist, but believes soundly in that poorly defined something called "adequate national defense." These "preparedists" are now ready to consider the performance and results of the last two months' pursuit of military duties on the border by the federalized militia.

Our national experience in defensiveness has been a costly one. The government has paid millions for the transporting and supplying of the men who answered the call to the colors. The men themselves have paid millions in lost time, lost salary, lost profits, lost opportunities. The stay at homes, some of them, have paid other unestimated sums for the relief of militia dependents. Industries crippled at a time of a glorious shortage of labor and consequent wage prosperity suffered the loss of their militia employees, many of whom held important posts in the industrial organization.

The total cost will be a difficult one to compute. It will be enormous. Now to take advantage of the expenditure. Now to get our money's worth, dollar for dollar; now to reap the benefits of the lesson, to learn what there is to be learned, what we have paid to learn, and credit the sum total cost to education.

General Staff Not Involved.

TO begin with there is one fact of which the general public is not aware. That is that the border mobilization was not planned by the general staff of the war department. This staff is composed of the brains of the army for the purpose of giving the nation the benefit of scientific direction and management of its military affairs. The notion of sending untrained troops to the border at the time they were sent did not originate in the mind of the general staff. And it is the generally accepted belief—among regular army officers—that the sudden call to the border was diametrically opposed to the recommendations of the general staff.

The regular army plan for the mobilization, so far as it has leaked out, called for the assembly of the several state guards in their respective state concentration points, where their organization was to be completed, the work of recruiting up to war strength begun, and, more important still, the enormous labor of completely equipping the militiamen. Following this the plan specified the mobilization of the troops in army posts in or adjacent to their states, where the men could occupy the barracks left empty by the departure of all the regular forces for the border.

In these army posts, upon which the nation has spent millions of dollars, the militiamen were to have received their soldiery training under all the accommodations of barrack life, which would have permitted a greater application of time and effort on drilling and thoroughly acquainting the men with the use of their arms. Relieved of the distracting and uninteresting labor of camp housekeeping, the ditch digging, the brush cutting, the potato peeling, and sanitation drudgery, the men were to have devoted their entire energies to an intensive study of soldiering, target practice, fire control and distribution, field maneuvers, lectures, officer school, etc.

There was nothing new about the plan. It is in use today in the training camps in Canada, in Australia, and other contributing colonies of the entente allies, where the regiments of territorials are being trained and drilled at or near their homes, in accustomed climates while they habituate themselves to unaccustomed work and unaccustomed diet. It has always been used in Germany, in France—the great military nations. The "seasoning" process which is concomitant with the scientifically abandoned doctrine that men to become soldiers must be exposed to privations, discomforts, and a general "roughing it" program, has in the experience of the last few years been condemned as a debilitating detriment to individual military effectiveness.

In Montreal the camp drudgery is done by privates, laborers, and fighting ineffectives. The soldiers to be undergo ten hours' strict soldier training daily for six days a week, and on the seventh they have a recreation period which permits them to go to the city and spend the day with their friends or family. The recruits are not sent far away to some unaccustomed climate to learn their new vocation. And Canada is at war.

Although the border mobilization of the militia is generally condemned by the military experts in view of its absolute ignoring of the general staff's recommendations, the war department, working under the handicap of unpreparedness as to plan, ways, or means, applied itself obediently to the will of the state department or whatever governmental division directed the border bungle.

Away went the boys to the border, bands playing, flags waving, mothers crying, fathers choking, sweethearts thrilling, cameras snapping, typewriters clacking, transmitters clicking, newsboys shouting, everybody cheering——

Away they went to dare and do
For the old red, white, and blue,
Villa chasing,
Self-effacing.
Through the mesquite in the cactus,
Bully boys they were that backed us,
Double timing,
Songsters rhyming,
"Dolly Gray" and "Blue Bell" chiming,
Busting greasers
On their beezers,
"Up and beat 'em"—ad infinitum.

Transportation Problem Bungled.

TRANSPORTATION was the first difficulty which betrayed the lack of industrial preparedness. The railroads did wonderfully well—far better than it was expected they could do. They had never done so well before. The rail managers pointed with pride to their achievements. Yet in moving 100,000 men across the continent to the border, nothing more was accomplished than has been done numerous times during large national conventions or world's expositions.

The militiamen wanted sleeping cars, and the minute they asked for them up went the cry of "mollycoddle," and the stay-at-home wits began to inquire whether each of the boys in khaki would like to have his valet in attendance throughout the campaign. Sleeping cars were not necessary. That was proven by dozens of troop trains of dingy, overloaded day coaches from the Atlantic seaboard lines, which reached the Rio Grande valley after five and six days' railroad buffeting, and discharged their weary, sleepless, unwashed human freight.

There were plenty of sleeping cars. But they were in use by the regular traffic. You see, the reason the militiamen asked for sleeping cars was this—they felt they were the fire department answering the alarm. As such they believed they should have had precedence over all other traffic. They felt that in return for the sacrifices they were making in rushing to the colors, the general public should make some compensating sacrifice, particularly if such sacrifice would enable the men to reach the border sooner and in better condition.

"We can get along without sleepers all right," one Massachusetts infantryman told me as he and his company detrained from delapidated Boston and Albany day coaches in El Paso. "We can travel in box cars if there is the necessity, but there has been no need of it. You can satisfy your hunger all right with a cup of black coffee and three hardtack, but there is no use eating that stuff if there is roast beef and potatoes in front of you, or even a Saturday night mess of 'Boston baked.'"

And speaking of food recalls the disquieting dispatches from Cleveland and other points where the headlines shoot home twinges of responsibility with "MILITIA EN ROUTE RIOT FOR FOOD," "GUARDSMEN STORM RESTAURANTS," and "SOLDIERS LEAVE TRAINS TO RAID GROCERY STORES." "Food riots" is a phrase to which we were accustomed only in connection with British stories of conditions in Germany or our own unemployment problem.

The food shortage on the troop trains was attributed to three causes. They were: Insufficiency of supplies, untastefulness of diet, and poor management of what supplies there were. Some New Yorkers told me that they made the entire trip on hard tack and water—prison fare. Some with private funds were able to purchase sandwiches at wayside stations, but officers who donated large sums to the relief of their men on the trip found many instances where they were unable to buy food in sufficient quantities. Many were the telegrams that were sent on in advance of the troop trains to have 2,000 hard boiled eggs waiting at such and such a station at such and such a time, and many were the disappointments and belt tightenings when the food failed to appear.

It is admitted that there was much wastage of supplies and there is no question that "willful waste" drew its complement of "woeful want." Lack of experience on the part of the guardsmen was the reason. Empty stomach traveling ended upon the arrival of the militiamen in the southwest—the happy hunting ground of the real estate gentry, the land of salesmen, the colony builders, and the town lot peddlers.

Thus it was that the militiamen, detraining at their respective destinations along the border were marched forth to the edges of the prospective metropolis at which they had landed and there introduced to the brush covered jungle which they were to improve and change to the site for a future town addition.

In many of the towns the industrious booster bund had sent gangs of Mexican laborers through the brush to decimate the undergrowth with their machettes, and in other places to lay water piping for the company streets which had been planned hurriedly by the regular army officers in charge of designating the camp sites. The men went to work with a will, clearing the brush, digging drainage ditches, hauling, carting, carrying.

In Brownsville the Iowa brigade landed and took the first look at its future home. Cactus and mesquite, Spanish dagger and ebony brush, sand, water, heat and insects, were the tenants to be ousted. Animal and vegetable life alike wore horns and thorns, stickers and prickers, stingers and biters. Fleas and flies, mosquitoes and chiggers, blister bugs and buzzing beetles, tarantulas, scorpions, centipedes of all sizes and colors, snakes of varying length, complexion and disposition, all joined with the local chamber of commerce in extending a rousing welcome.

Have I overlooked what was done for what was not done? Have I been scant in praise of what was done right? Have I been tactlessly remiss with congratulations and brutally frank with cold observations? I have.

In another series, if the editor permits, I will present the pleasing side of the picture. Quartermaster Aloe, working far into the night, every night; Capt. McCoy doing a general officer's work with captain's rank and pay; militia officers, business leaders, struggling with the atrocious accounting system, although every one of them could have installed an infinitely better one if permitted by officialdom; the courage of other business men, wielding ax and spade in the frightful heat, digging ditches, building picket lines, and doing other labor they should not have been called upon to do. And Gen. Parker, medal of honor hero, who in the face of all obstacles, lack of modern equipment, and government indifference, has kept his cavalry on a par with Russia's, working night and day to bring order out of the chaos thrust upon him.

But first must be set out the wrongfulness of the civilian head of the army compelling the mobilization of troops in the field contrary to world-wide lessons fully learned by soldiers.

In this instance it has led only to unparalleled discomfort, not a little tragedy and some avoidable deaths. If it should occur again in the face of a competent enemy it might lead to national destruction.

In Manana Land.

IT was the same throughout that tropical strip which is called the lower Rio Grande valley and which bears the military designation of the Brownsville district. It was slightly different but no better, to the north and west along the sandy desert wastes of the border river. Westward from El Paso along the boundary lines the scenery changed to a more somber desolate hue, the air became lighter, the sun seemingly stronger, but the average condition of the militiamen pretty much the same as those tucked away in the geographical end of all things where the Rio Grande, the Gulf of Mexico, the United States of America, and the Dis-United States of Mexico, collide.

For seemingly unending hours, days, and weeks the guardsmen labored on their improvement work, their town addition building, their road construction, their camp housekeeping duties—"knitting," as the men called it. White inhabitants of the mañana land frontier looked on and marveled. "White men," which is the nomenclature for those who are not Mexicans, complimented the display of northern "pep" with which the guardsmen attacked the work in front of them. In the Rio Grande tropics such labor is done only by Mexicans, of whom there are thousands who work for from 50 cents to $1 a day.

The colonel of an Iowa regiment showed me his men, tugging away at loaded transport wagons, working in the places of the absent army mules, to drag the loaded vehicles away from the camp and dump the collected refuse. The regiment was shy on mules. The men had to place their shoulders to the yoke.

The duration of this labor and the extent to which it interfered with the training of the men is officially hinted in a recent published statement from Gen. Parker, commander of the Brownsville district. When domestic pressure was being applied to bring about the recall of the First Illinois cavalry, to its home state, Gen. Parker, in advising against the recall, said that the regiment had almost completed the fatigue work and was just ready to get some good training. This was after the pick and shovel exercises had lasted three months.

The medical officers were determined to prevent a repetition of Chattanooga and Montauk Point. Intensive sanitation, that peace time occupation which keeps idle soldiers busy after they are trained, was pursued vigorously. In some of the camps it became necessary to dig long drainage ditches to carry off the surface water, which increased the insect life to a menace. The size of these works might be inferred from the names with which the men dubbed them—"the Panama canal," "the English channel," and "Gondola avenue."

Construction of latrines, mess halls, incinerators, the oiling of stagnant water, hauling and similar labors engaged the time and energy of the northerners and northwesterners and northeasterners, under the direct rays of a tropical sun which drove the mercury up to 127 and even beyond.

I stood one day in front of the quarters of Brig. Gen. Dyer of the Second New York brigade, at McAllen, Tex., and saw the thermometer register 125. By placing the palm of the hand on the glass the mercury could be made to fall almost to blood heat.

"We are human refrigerators," one of the general's aids said.

"I think the thermometer is wrong," observed the general.

He brought another instrument from within his quarters and replaced the first one in the sun. We stood by and watched the indicator rise from 98 to 118 degrees.

It was in such igneous air as this that the citizen soldiery jumped into work which only Mexican peons, weazened and withered as to exterior but wiry and enduring as to internal arrangement, attempt to perform in this part of the country. I heard Texans of long border experience say they would mutiny if forced to such extremes.

Of course, there was no mutiny. The men stood the gaff. They stood it like good fellows. Certainly it was hot. They became dizzy from the sun. Climatic combinations tended to debilitate, to sap strength and stamina, but they bore it. Unaccustomed to the work, unaccustomed to the climate, unaccustomed to the diet, they went at whatever was put before them with blind faith in the belief that it was making soldiers of them. Every man in the national guard wanted to be a soldier.

Cooks Blamed for Food.

THERE was much difficulty with the food, but most of the blame devolved upon the shoulders of the cooks, who were untrained in the preparation of the army rations. The depot quartermaster, as far as I was able to learn, was never remiss in his supplies of coffee, bacon, hardtack, beans, and flour. These supplies, dealt out on the basis of 30 cents worth per day per man, were seldom missing, but it was a diet which the men found hard to stomach day after day. Said a Virginia infantryman one day, as I was walking through his company street at mess time: "This is the same grub the army deals out to the men up in Alaska in midwinter. I wonder why we can't get some fresh vegetables. That's all they are supposed to produce in this valley."

Leaden pellets of uncooked rice are far from appetizing, and the fact that the cook is a friend of yours and you know that he is doing the best he can doesn't relieve the indigestion and intestinal disorders that are sure to follow. Ptomaine poison was certain to break out, and it did. There were 208 serious cases of the poisoning in one Minnesota regiment at Llano Grande on account of canned stuffs. The cooks of the regiment reported that when they jabbed a knife into some of the cans of tomatoes which were issued to them the cans immediately spouted blood red geysers of sour catsup.

When the grumbling about the food began there was a marked improvement, and in many regiments regular army cooks arrived, tardily, to explain cuisine mysteries to their civilian protégés. Competent cooks could have been obtained, but the army will not pay the wages of an assistant cook at a third class restaurant in the loop.

Private funds, both individual and collective, went far toward satisfying the militiamen's healthy craving for a more varied diet than the army ration permitted. Infantry companies from the southern part of Minnesota supplemented their messes by purchases from company funds which ranged all the way from $200 to $2,000, raised from public subscriptions back in the towns from which the companies came. The "boys" looked upon that fund as a life saver after a few weeks of the heavy, heatening "chow."

With the arrival of the militiamen numerous restaurants sprang up over night in the nearby towns and on the edges of the camps. Quite frequently these institutions contributed momentary satiety to the hunger gnawing, but subsequent internal revolutions. Brownsville newspapers editorially advocated the establishment of food inspection in these "eating houses." By way of comparison with the tiresome camp fare, it was worth a trial, anyway, and men who could afford it ate in town as frequently as their pocketbooks and camp leave would permit.

In McAllen, the headquarters for the New York division, one Greek met another Greek, and, of couse, they opened up a restaurant, under the sign, "Jack's Branch, 2,500 Miles From Broadway." In Brownsville the "Chicago Bar" advertised free lunch, while the Manhattan and Oriental café presented elaborate bills of fare, from which at times diners could select something that happened to be in stock. At San Antonio and El Paso there was real food to be had—regular meals, with music and lights and dancing, roof gardens, cabarets, all to supply a change from the "come-and-get-it" stuff.

Dainty tastes and finicky appetites were put to rout by the stomachs that had to supply the steam for all the work that had to be done. The enormous amount of camp labor, which is well called "fatigue," and the orders of Gen. Funston interfered greatly with the real soldier training of the men, decreed that the men were not to be drilled or placed on hard fatigue between the hours of 10 a. m. and 3 p. m., on account of the heat. This order was followed as closely as the troop commanders could, although there were numerous unnecessary exceptions. The regimental veterinarians heartily concurred in the order, because they had in mind the condition of the few horses possessed by the regiment, of which approximately 10 per cent were on the sick picket line most of the time.

Storms Play Havoc with Camps.

AGAIN, the destructiveness of the rain and wind storms seemed to make the fatigue almost interminable. After rains drill schedules would have to be abandoned for days while new ditches were dug or old ones deepened or extended, or surface water drained, or oiled, or blown down tents reërected and patched together. One night the wind and rain were so intense that the majority of the 40,000 men in the valley found themselves shelterless and forced to abandon their camps for the more stable habitations of the nearest town. Gen. Parker's orders on that day read:

HEADQUARTERS BROWNSVILLE DISTRICT,
Brownsville, Texas.
August 18, 1916.

From: District Commander.
To: All commanding officers of troops in Brownsville Camps.
Subject: Preparation for storm.

1. In view of the increasing severity of the storm and the weather prophecy that it will not reach its height of violence until near midnight tonight, it may be necessary to take temporary shelter in the town of Brownsville. In that case the commanding general directs assignment of shelter as follows:

Iowa brigade, brigade headquarters and First regiment to city hall.
Second Iowa to public school building.
Third Iowa and company of Iowa engineers to the courthouse.
First Illinois cavalry, new schoolhouse.

VIRGINIA TROOPS.

First regiment to Fort Brown.
Second regiment to moving picture theaters.
One battalion Iowa field artillery to Hinckley hall.
All field hospitals and ambulance companies on Victoria Heights to the new base hospital.
Thirty-sixth infantry to any shelter in the vicinity of their camp south of Levee street. Suggested freight and passenger depots or large mills or warehouses along railroad.
Battery D, Fifth field artillery, to quartermaster's depot at Rice mill.

2. Any detachments of troops left unprovided for to Fort Brown. Detachments under an officer will be left in each camp to look after public animals and government property.

3. The regiments will march equipped for the field and carry two days' cooked rations and receptacles for making coffee; candles and lamps will be taken.

4. Officers will remain with their organizations.

By command of Brigadier General Parker.

F. McCOY,
Captain Third Cavalry, Acting Chief of Staff.

The only camp in the storm district not blown down was that of the First Illinois cavalry, which had been floored and framed by private subscription raised by Col. Foreman after Secretary of War Baker had refused the recommendation of the local commanders for lumber.

Prevented Proper Training.

THESE conditions, ever recurring during the ten weeks in which I observed the militiamen, prevented adequate training. Other detracting features were lack of facilities for training and lack of equipment. Many of the regiments were on the border six weeks without having as much as fired one single practice shot.

At San Benito, the camp of the First Oklahoma infantry, I talked with Capt. Jarboe, who four years ago was the champion long distance rifle shot of the world. He said that his men only theoretically knew how to insert a cartridge into the chambers of their rifles. No ammunition had been issued to them. There had been no target practice for the regiment since the state encampment the year before, and with the organization increased about 50 per cent by recruits, he said he believed there were some men in the regiment who had never fired a gun.

The Iowa and Virginia brigades at Brownsville were in little better condition. The first night sentries from among these boys from the prairies and the Blue Ridge walked their lonely posts on the edge of the clearings, their guns were empty and so were their belts. "If anybody had tried to jump our camp we would have had to club 'em back," said an Iowan.

At Llano Grande, where Brig. Gen. Lewis commanded the provisional division composed of Indiana, Minnesota, Nebraska, and North Dakota troops, a month and a half had expired before arrangements had been made to train the men in the actual firing of their rifles.

Then the training was conducted on a miniature scale. The size and range of the targets was reduced, to suit cramped accommodations. The targets were located only 100 feet from the firing line. The men started to train in small numbers at these "shooting gallery" ranges, and many of them confessed that they had no idea of a distance of 500 yards, which is the battle sight range with the Springfield rifles. The range of this gun extends to 2,000 yards and more, a distance at which the American soldier with his high powered long range weapon would have the advantage over Mexicans armed with shorter range pieces. But throughout the first two months of the border mobilization even such practice was limited.

At San Antonio, apparently there was no available space for field exercises or target practice, because the infantry regiments, long before they had been completely shod, were marched twenty miles or more to practice grounds where they could do target work and maneuvers. Through this arrangement the efficiency of the men was reduced, not only by the heat of the unaccustomed marches in which hundreds collapsed, but the discomforts attendant upon living in pup tents and the scarcity of water supply.

The Illinois artillery arrived at San Antonio, with only one battery that had even fired a shot. A month later when the batteries went to Leon Springs for maneuvers and practice, regular army instructors severely criticised the organization and said that they would be worse than useless in field operations owing to their slowness in taking and leaving positions, and manipulating the guns. Nevertheless the batteries were restricted to a few rounds of ammunition with which to attempt improvement. The Minnesota artillery at Llano Grande had had only subcaliber practice—which means aiming a cannon and firing a pistol blank cartridge.

Equipment Not Uniform.

NONUNIFORMITY of equipment resulted in further reduction of efficiency, not to mention the military appearance of the guardsmen. Some wore khaki of one hue, some of another; some had leggings of one vintage and some of another; some had the back packs of the latest model and others had the old blanket rolls that were over the left shoulder, complemented by a cumbersome haversack dangling from the left hip. Some had the new bottle canteens and others had the old pancake variety.

These incongruities extended into the vital matter of arms. In a cavalry regiment at Brownsville some of the men carried the new regulation automatic pistols, while the rest were provided with an old issue sidearm of the revolver type. This meant that the regiment would have to depend upon being supplied with two different kinds of ammunition, .38 caliber cartridges for the old revolvers and .45-caliber shells for the new automatics. In addition, some of the troops had the old curved sabers and others had the new lance sabers, each calling for a different set of regulations covering their use. An assorted shipment of saddles, some of one color leather, some of another, completed the hodgepodge.

The lack of horses was felt by all of the militia organizations. The infantry regiments could not get enough mounts for officers and orderlies or mules for the transport wagons. This handicap greatly interfered with and consequently prolonged the camp work, which meant just that much more time away from drilling. Again the lack of transport prevented the foot regiments from attempting extended marches as regiments and removed the possibility of their ever crossing the border, if the order for invasion had been received.

It is no recent knowledge that an army travels on its stomach and without transport service a regiment is without supplies for the traveling bellies. Consequently it would be able to advance just as far as the food carried individually by the men would take them.

Artillery regiments were in almost the same fix. Not only were most of them unable to obtain mules for their combat wagons, but horses to drag the field pieces were missing. The Iowa artillery at Brownsville didn't have enough horses. The Illinois batteries arrived with only a handful of horses, hardly sufficient to haul a small portion of their armament and supply trains. The Indiana artillery at Llano Grande was able to move about as far as a coast defense fort; the Minnesota artillery at the same place could just as well have changed its military designation from field artillery to stationary artillery. The New York artillery brigade had horses enough for one and a half regiments when I visited it two months after its arrival at the "front."

"Dead horses" was the name which the men applied to the majority of the animals which were received from the government. Most of them were undersized, soft, and sickly. The picket lines of the veterinarians usually had 10 per cent of the unit's horseflesh under treatment for influenza, catarrh, and shipping fever. Frequent applications of creosote were necessary to keep the animals from being devoured by ticks and insects. When one militia outfit at Brownsville brought its horses to Fort Brown to have them shod the regular army veterinarians refused to permit the animals in the same corral with the regular army horses on account of the condition of the militia live stock.

Then there was the matter of horseshoes, or rather there wasn't the matter of horseshoes. The matter really was that there were no horseshoes. Our cavalry and artillery horses were barefooted. It wasn't so bad when the ground was soft from the rains, but when the road became hard and baked under the sun equitation ceased or was indulged in with utmost care on account of the barefooted condition of the horses. The First Illinois cavalry after weeks of requisitioning, received some horseshoes, but not enough to shoe the regiment and not more than enough to shoe the front feet of the sufficient number of horses which the regiment had. In all mounted regiments the scarcity of horseshoers and quite frequently the absence of tools and horseshoeing outfits would have made horseshoeing out of the question, even if horseshoes had been obtainable.

Mounted Practice Impossible.

AT Llano Grande Batteries A, B, and C of Indiana were without horseshoes, although after six weeks they had received horses. Because the horses were barefooted the officers had to drill the artillerymen on foot. The guardsmen manned the field pieces as they used to back in their Indiana armories every Thursday night, and went through stationary firing drills, but mounted practice was out of the question.

Of this Indiana battalion one officer told me that none of the men in the organization had fired a real shot in more than a year and that there were some of the recruits who had never heard a cannon fired. He said that arrangements were being made with Fort Brown to transport the men of the Indiana units to Brownsville on motor trucks and there borrow the guns of the Iowa artillery for firing practice on old Palo Alto battlefield, ten miles out of that town. This meant, if carried out, that the gunners would practice marksmanship on one set of guns and then, if needed in battle, would try their luck on an entirely different set.

The Minnesota artillery at Llano Grande could not move because of the universal discrepancy between sizes of the horses' necks and the sizes of the army steel collars. The collars did not fit and apparently were not possible of an adjustment that would make them fit. The result was that extended mounted drill was impracticable and officers of the battalion were trying to arrange to have the pieces dragged to Brownsville behind motor trucks so that the men could get some much needed firing practice. Palo Alto battlefield was the only place in the valley where the army could secure a sufficient expanse of unpopulated land for artillery practice, and its flatness, absence of ridges and rolling country, made the test of up to date indirect firing out of the question.

The First New York cavalry and its fashionable satellite, Squadron A, brought most of their horses with them to McAllen, where they were placed in camp with a twenty acre swamp on one side of them and the brigade dump on the other side. The swamp contributed mosquitoes and the dump incubated flies and gnats. I watched a trooper in this camp as he conveyed a spoonful of beans from his mess kit to his mouth. He lifted the spoon with his left hand while with his right hand he fanned it to protect it from insects on the trip to the mouth. Two men conversing in the open took on the appearance of a prize ring contest, or a pantomime or a case of St. Vitus dance. The helpless horses were subjected to a constant night and day irritation from the hungry swarms.

I talked with the colonel of the First New York horse for ten minutes and became exhausted from swinging hands and arms in front of my face and head to keep the hoards of insects in motion.

"We're going to move to another site," the colonel said. "We can't stand it here."

Neither could I.

NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY.

Debutante Dates Being Arranged for a Long List.

THESE are dull days for the gay world of society. Every one who isn't closing the family country place is getting the family town house into order, getting the youth of the household off to school, and waiting for the chirp of the first robin of another social season. The only really active work that is being done is the naming of debutante dates.

When Miss Isabel MacLeish was presented, a week ago yesterday, by her mother at a tea at "Craigie Lee," the MacLeish Glencoe estate, she had as her assistants ten young north shore girls who will make their bows to society this winter.

Miss Lelita Armour, daughter of Mrs. J. Ogden Armour of 3724 Michigan avenue, was one of them. The date of Miss Armour's debut has not been decided upon.

Another debutante, who still has the date to name, is Miss Ermina Carry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Carry of 1100 Lake Shore drive.

Miss Margaret Pullman, daughter of Mrs. William C. Pullman of 199 Lake Shore drive, will be presented on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 25, at a tea dance at the Blackstone hotel.

Others in November.

Miss Sylvia Shaw, daughter of Mrs. Howard Van Doren Shaw of 1130 Lake Shore drive, and Miss Harriet Buckingham, daughter of Mrs. John Buckingham of Winnetka, were two more of the group of charming assistants. They will be presented together at a dinner dance at the Blackstone hotel on Friday evening, Nov. 24.

Miss Betty Hoyt, daughter of Mrs. Phelps B. Hoyt of Winnetka, will be presented at the new house which her grandfather, Lewis D. Allen, with whom she and her mother live, has taken, at 40 East Cedar street, at a reception on the afternoon of Nov. 11. Miss Helen Hoyne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Hoyne of 118 East Twenty-first street, was another of the assistants. On New Year's night her mother and Mrs. Hoyt will give a young people's dance for her and Miss Betty Hoyt at the Blackstone hotel.

Miss Catherine Blossom, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Blossom of Hubbard Woods, was another of the group. She will be presented at a ball at the Blackstone hotel on Friday evening, Dec. 29.

Miss Selfridge Comes to Chicago.

As interesting a debut as the season will offer will be that of Miss Violette Selfridge, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gordon Selfridge of London. Her mother and her sister, Miss Rosalie Selfridge, will come over in October and spend the months until after the holidays with the Frank R. Chandlers of 744 Rush street, and Miss Violette probably will be presented in the old homestead where Mrs. Selfridge as Rose Buckingham was married. Three years ago Miss Rosalie Selfridge came to her native heath to be introduced to society—a pretty sentiment that brings back Chicagoans from abroad.

On Saturday, Oct. [illegible], Miss Elizabeth Goodrich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert W. Goodrich of 920 Lincoln parkway, will be presented to society.

Nov. 4 is the date chosen by Miss Henrietta Wurts, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pemberton Wurts of 1212 North State street.

On Saturday, Nov. 18, Miss Margaret L. Clinch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. Floyd Clinch of Hubbard Woods, will be presented at a tea dance at the Blackstone.

On the same day Mrs. Julian Mason of 1355 North State street will present her niece, Miss Elizabeth Gray, daughter of Walter Gray of the Blackstone. Miss Gray and her father have but recently returned from an interesting trip to Honolulu and the Hawaiian islands.

Ball for Miss Wacker.

Miss Rosalie Wacker, daughter of Charles H. Wacker of 1431 North State street, will be introduced to society at a ball at the Blackstone.

Miss Erminie Matthews, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Matthews Jr. of 3824 Michigan avenue, is also one of the season's debutantes. Since the family is in mourning Miss Matthews will have no formal presentation.

Miss Edith Healy Besly, daughter of Mrs. Charles Howard Besly of Hinsdale, will be presented by her mother at a ball at the Virginia hotel on Saturday evening, Dec. 9.

One of the last debuts of the year will be that of Miss Isabel Gilmore, daughter of Mrs. Arnold G. Gilmore of Winnetka, who will give a ball at the Blackstone on the evening of Dec. 28 for her daughter.

One of the debutantes of some years hence is a visitor in Lake Forest who has stirred the suburb with her coterie of pets. Mrs. Samuel Chase's youngest daughter, Janet, arrived last week to visit Mrs. Keene Addington's two children and with little Janet came twelve pets, the largest a big white rabbit. Tadpoles, white mice, everything portable, came with her.

Working for the Red Cross.

Mrs. Arthur Aldis has returned from the east with her enthusiasm for Red Cross work even more vital than it was when she left. While she was there she met Miss Perkins, who has charge of the work of the American Red Cross in France, and together they went from town to town, telephoning ahead that they were coming, finding a group of eager women awaiting them, and telling of the work of the Red Cross in such a way that they organized groups wherever they stopped. In York Harbor they left a group of seventy women eager to work.

The interest in the work of the Red Cross in France is much keener in the east than the interest in the work of the American Red Cross in this country, Mrs. Aldis says.

Mrs. Aldis and Mrs. Russell Tyson have persuaded Miss Perkins to come to Chicago. She will arrive on the 2d of October and on the 3d or 4th Mrs. Aldis will give a tea for her. Mrs. Dana, who gives a keenly pathetic little monologue in French in connection with Miss Perkins' talks, will also come on from the east to be the guest of Mrs. Aldis and Mrs. Tyson.

How to Select Your Corset

HERE we give you five simple rules or guides that will turn the selection of your corset into a real pleasure.

First: Decide that your figure is individual—that you need a corset designed for you, and it should be a front-lacing corset.

Second: Go to the store where competent graduate corsetieres are employed. Insist on an experienced sales-person for your fitting.

Third: Remember that your corset dollars go farther if you select two corsets at a time. One for home wear and another for social engagements and street wear.

Fourth: Unless the corset you select gives you all day comfort, good wearing service, and style that is exclusive, your corset fails regardless of what you pay for it.

Fifth: You can forget the other rules if the Gossard label is sewn in your corset. Two of the nine ideal figure types are shown below. There is a Gossard for every figure. Over fifty models for women with full figures.

Ideal Tall and Short Heavy Figures

CLARA WILLIAMS, a Triangle Film Star, wears Gossards. She is an ideal short, heavy figure—perfectly proportioned.

Dozens of Gossard models for both tall and short full figures are yours to choose from. They reduce the hip line from two to six inches, reduce diaphragm, confine the upper back, and the corset never rides up on the body. The elastic sections at sides and back confine the thighs and upper limbs.

Models at $2, $2.50, $3.50, $5.00 and up to $25. Be fitted today.

News of the Chicago Women's Clubs

Wheaton Club Begins Another Busy Season.

By Haze Whitaker.

LEST we forget that in the suburbs of this big city, wise, wide awake women are busy at both civic and municipal reform, and that they are thoroughly enjoying the good work, too, it will be well to look into the activities of one of the most representative suburban clubs, the Wheaton Woman's Civic club.

The season's work will open with an autumn luncheon Tuesday afternoon at the Wheaton Golf club, and a program both interesting and entertaining will be given.

Among the guests of honor will be Mrs. C. H. Zimmerman, president of the State Federation of Women's clubs; Mrs. Frederick A. Dow, state secretary of the general federation; Mrs. C. H. Talbot, president of the Eleventh district federation; Mrs. J. C. Mason, chairman of the legislative department of the federation; Miss Harriet E. Vittum, civic director of the Woman's City club, Chicago; Miss Lucy Barber, member of the board of education of Wheaton; Mrs. F. D. L. Squires, candidate for university trustee and vice president of the club; W. [illegible], president of the Wheaton Business Men's association; J. H. [illegible], fire marshal of Wheaton, and Miss Katharine Merrill, reader. The subject of the speeches will be the club's motto: "Concentration, Coöperation, Conservation."

There are several excellent reasons why the Wheaton club, since its organization in 1914, has won for itself a place of honor on the "club map." Here are some: The original and effective methods employed in a "clean-up" campaign so attracted the attention of the national "clean-up and paint-up" campaign bureau that permission was asked to incorporate an account of the campaign in the bureau's annual report. Then the baby welfare campaign last spring is also to be added to the club's list of laurels, for the children's department at Washington has asked for a description of the home made equipment and bathroom demonstration which was given by one of the members in order to reprint it in the next baby welfare bulletin issued by the government.

But what the club feels has been its most unusual undertaking was the fire inspection and prevention campaign, held during its first year. This had much publicity because of its nature, and one insurance journal stated that the Wheaton Civic club had the distinction of going down in the records of the insurance world and the state of Illinois as being the first woman's club to request such an inspection. One paper said in part: "Although many town inspections have been made at the request of commercial clubs and municipal authorities, this is the first inspection held at the request of the organized women of the community."

The inspection was made by the Illinois Fire Prevention association and the state fire marshal's department. About twenty inspectors visited Wheaton and examined ninety-eight buildings in the business district, called fire drills in the schools, notified property owners of defects, and made a public report at a massmeeting. Addresses on fire prevention were given, and the decrease in the number of fires has proven the great benefit the inspection has been.

The club's latest achievement was to carry the election for commission form of government, to go into effect next spring.

Judging from the next year's program, the good work is still to continue.

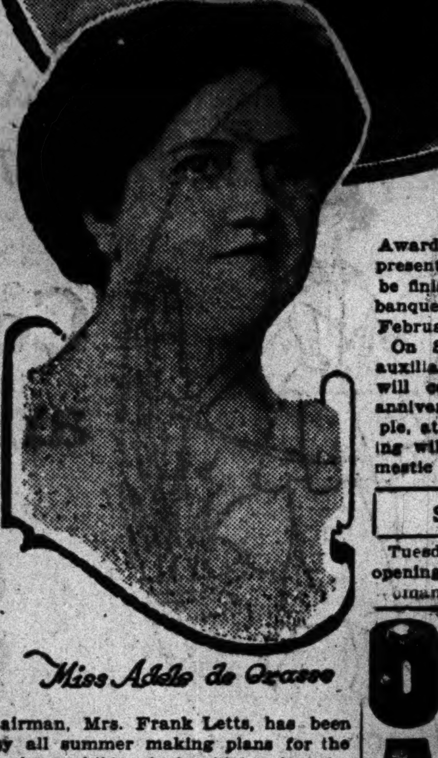
The present officers and directors are: Mrs. E. E. R. Tratman, president; Mrs. F. D. L. Squires, Mrs. W. H. Caldwell, Mrs. E. W. Dresser, Mrs. M. Slusser, vice presidents; Miss Adele de Grasse, corresponding secretary; Mrs. W. G. Coffey, recording secretary; Mrs. Hess [illegible], treasurer; Miss Carrie Ashley, auditor, and Miss D. M. Coffey, Mrs. F. W. Steven, and Mrs. S. L. Rathje, directors.

Mrs. W. G. Coffey

Mrs. Joseph Fish

Mrs. Joseph Fish is president of the Co-operative league, which is conducting an extensive membership campaign in the hope of meeting the deficit upon the Home for Business Mothers, at 4206 Ellis avenue.

Mrs. W. G. Coffey is the recording secretary of the Wheaton Woman's Civic club, who demonstrated home made equipment at the Baby Welfare week exhibit last spring. Mrs. Coffey has charge of the autumn luncheon which the club is giving on Tuesday afternoon at the Wheaton Golf club. Miss Adele de Grasse is the corresponding secretary of the club.



DOWNTOWN CLUBS.

With two objects in view for the work of the coming season, the Home Makers' guild of Chicago will hold its first meeting tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock in room 800 Fine Arts building. The guild will work to secure the establishment of a government homemakers' bureau in Washington and to establish throughout the country an annual homemakers' day. The last Monday in October has been selected by the board of directors as homemakers' day. According to an announcement just issued by the guild its object is:

To obtain recognition for the home and its allied activities as the basic foundation of all civic and national progress; to obtain for women the same recognition and honor for efficient homemaking that is awarded other skilled professions; to awaken in legislative bodies a larger sense of justice and appreciation for women who are engaged in homemaking; to demand that all educational institutions incorporate in their curriculum such fundamental teachings of art and science as are needful to the creation of greater efficiency in developing the physical, mental, moral, and social life of the [illegible]; to arrange for a series of honor medals to be awarded to women who have achieved special success in any department of homemaking; to conduct such educational propaganda as conditions may demand, and to set apart the last Monday in October of each year as homemakers' day.

Following are the officers of the organization: President, Mrs. Robert L. McCall; secretary, Mrs. Philip Barnard; first vice president, Mrs. Marshall A. Roe; second vice president at large, Mrs. Helen St. Rayner; federation vice president, Miss Frances Thompson; vice president Little Home Makers, Mrs. C. J. Currie; vice president Junior Home Makers, Mrs. F. H. Davis; assistant secretary, Belle Morse; treasurer, Mrs. Page Waller Eaton; historian, Mrs. John T. McCormick; founder, Mrs. T. Vernette Morse.

North Carolina colony of the Illinois Colony club will give a musical extravaganza on Friday afternoon at the Congress hotel. There will be a program by professional singers and entertainers. The guests of honor will include Valli-Valli of Cohan's revue; Grace Le Roy Kahn, composer; Mrs. Eugene Reilley, vice president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. D. Harry Hammer, commander in chief, and Mrs. F. H. Greene, founder of the club. The officers of the North Carolina colony are: Mrs. Frank M. Fulton, chief; Mrs. H. C. Allen, record keeper; Mrs. R. H. Owen, purse holder, and Mrs. C. Anderson, historian.

Activities of the Woman's City club will begin tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock when the bathing beaches and comfort stations committee meets with Mrs. Moses Purvin. After a 1 o'clock luncheon at the Auditorium hotel the Rev. Rowena Morse Mann will talk on "The Dawn of the World Federation." On Tuesday at 12:15 p. m. the first of a series of talks on citizenship will be given at the clubrooms, 116 South Michigan avenue. These noonday classes are especially for the benefit of business women and have been arranged by the chairman, Miss Grace Nicholes. The civil service committee has its opening meeting Wednesday at 11 a. m. and will meet thereafter every fourth Wednesday of each month, with Mrs. J. Quan as chairman. The annual luncheon of the Tuesday morning citizenship class will be given Tuesday, with Mrs. Edward W. Bemis as chairman. On Oct. 2 at 2 p. m. a general business meeting will be held at the clubrooms. Reports will be given by the secretary, treasurer, civic director, police chairman, exhibit committee, and the central municipal citizenship committee. The exhibit chairman, Mrs. Frank Letts, has been busy all summer making plans for the complete exhibit which will be given by the club the middle of October. On Oct. 16 Mrs. William S. Hefferan, chairman of the education committee, announces a meeting at 2 p. m. to discuss "Overcrowding in the High Schools." The ward leaders' meeting and luncheon will be held every Monday. The Thirteenth ward, of which Dr. Lindsey-Wynekoop is leader, has been holding concerts every Sunday afternoon all summer at the Garfield park refectory and will continue to meet there the first and third Tuesdays at 3 p. m. The Eighteenth ward leader, Mrs. Inez Rodgers Deach, announces meetings for every third Thursday in the month.

At the promenade tea of the Lois Dunning Arts club on Thursday the two most attractive members present will receive one a portrait in oil of the winner, to be painted from life by Mrs. Lois Dunning, president of the club, and the other a bust by the Italian sculptor, Giorgio Renault. Awards will be made by ballot, every one present being entitled to vote. Prizes will be finished and presented at the rainbow banquet to be held at one of the hotels in February.

On Saturday the Chicago Woman's auxiliary to the Railway Mail Service will celebrate the club's seventeenth anniversary in room 913, Masonic temple, at 8 p. m. The next regular meeting will be Oct. 4, which will be "Domestic Science day."

Wednesday evenings will be reserved for the women of the Kenwood club during the coming season. There will be cards, bowling, and billiards on those evenings.

It often takes a crisis to arouse interest and enthusiasm to a working pitch, and such seems to be the case with the Coöperative League home, which has been in existence for several years, during which time it has housed many mothers and children in comfortable, homey quarters at a nominal cost to the mothers, and often through crises where no money was forthcoming. But like all such homes, the upkeep is far ahead of the income and the deficit has become so great that the closing of the doors at 4206 Ellis avenue seems imminent. At a meeting of the board last week the president, Mrs. Joseph Fish, placed the matter before the members, and it was decided to launch a membership campaign in the hope of meeting the immediate needs of the home. It is the plan of the league to obtain a large membership not only in Chicago but throughout the country, in the hope that the work may enlarge and be far reaching in its results, and that with increasing interest and help mothers in other cities may find such homes where they may live reasonably and still keep their little ones with them. The league memberships are $2, $5, and $10. As the league is maintained by membership fees, gifts and donations are gladly received. Officers of the club, in addition to Mrs. Joseph Fish, president, are: Mrs. S. L. Eisendrath, vice president; Thomas Fletcher, treasurer; Mrs. Jacob Marks, acting treasurer; Mrs. Julius Stone, recording and corresponding secretary; Mrs. Charles H. Hoinville, financial secretary, and H. C. Whitehead, auditor. The directors are: Mrs. S. L. Eisendrath, Mrs. Joseph Fish, Mrs. James Greenebaum, Mrs. Charles H. Hoinville, Mrs. Julius Stone, Mrs. Henry Wursburg, Mrs. Albert H. Loeb, Mrs. Jacob Marks, Mrs. Albert Oppenheimer, Miss Ermina Moore, Miss Helen Fredman, Thomas Fletcher, and Charles H. Hoinville.

NORTH SIDE CLUBS.

At the meeting of the Twenty-fifth Ward Woman's Republican club on Thursday at 2:30 p. m. at Republican headquarters, 4647 North Racine avenue, Harry Nuby will speak on the coming presidential election.

all smashed up—almost like gruel. Some housewives even try to boil or bake their own beans today. But those who know Dyer's Beans don't—they realize, madam, it's genuine folly. We have better facilities to cook and bake beans perfectly—so every bean is perfect when it reaches your table. We devote all of our time to preparing beans—we know just how to make them so delicious that even the most critical guest will go into ecstasies over them. Our spices are imported and mixed scientifically—the flavor they add is smacking-good indeed.

Dyer's Pork and Beans
With Tomato Sauce

today are found stocked up on thousands of pantry shelves ready for every meal and every cooking emergency, because thousands of mothers—and thousands of fathers and children, too—have learned to like them best of all. We would like to have you try them today, too.

Dyer's Beans are a careful blend of navy beans and soja beans—a richer, better tasting combination than navy beans alone.

For economy's sake—particularly for large families—we recommend our 21-oz. can. There is also a size of about 9 ounces. Look for Dyer's Beans on your grocer's shelves.

"It Rests Your Back!"

The illustration shows the Back-Resting Straps, inside of the corset, on a tension when laced with the back eyelets of the corset. As the straps are not as broad as the back of the corset, but cover the same space of the body, when adjusted and laced they give complete support to the small of the back. This restful supporting device—

RELIEVES BACKACHE

—also gives a most effective flattening effect at the back, preventing the corset from riding up; it assists in expansion of the chest and contraction of the abdominal region, and compels a graceful, erect military carriage when standing or walking.

NEW YORK SOCIETY by MME. Y.

Nothing to Do but Kill Time in Long Season.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Newport, having decided to prolong the regular season until November, just now finds itself in much the same fix as that of the young man in the song who was all dressed up with no place to go.

What does one do with a post-season after one gets it? More than one matron has asked herself this the last few days, and it is certain to become a more and more embarrassing question to answer. Nothing is so hard to kill as time hereabouts just now.

It has been four weeks since Dr. and Mrs. Alexander Hamilton Rice gave their black and white ball, and that really marked the end of the summer's festivities. It was at least the last of the big affairs, the last event worth planning for or looking forward to.

Since then, although there continue to be many announcements of an intention to stay on indefinitely this fall, no one seems to know just what to suggest by way of entertainment. One can't easily put in the time on the beach after the first chill has taken all the enthusiasm out of bathing. And though there is still golf and tennis and the Saturday night hops, the midweek period seems dull and dreary. Another week or two of it and I predict there will be a general exodus to Fifth avenue. Then down will come the shutters and up will go the curtains and the winter round of gayeties will be on.

Gather at Art Rooms.

Meantime the Newport Art association is doing what it can to be entertaining. Announcement was made last week that the rooms of the association would be kept open all winter. Here, then, will be a sort of established salon. Already it has become an informal gathering place for the ultra smart set of the colony, and hardly an afternoon passes now without there being a considerable gathering in the rooms. Tea is drunk and art is discussed, art in the abstract and art in the concrete.

Last Wednesday H. Anthony Dyer delivered the second of the series of talks he is giving there. His subject was, "Where Are We Getting in Modern Art?" So far as one could judge from the expressions on the faces of those who listened to him intently there was none present to tell him. Mr. Dyer had his own convictions on the subject, however, and as they sounded reasonable they were generally accepted by his hearers.

Before the first talk in this series last Saturday there was a reception given for Harrison S. Morris, the newly elected president of the association, and practically every family in Newport attended. It was announced then that G. Howard Hilder, the English artist, has leased one of the studios recently added to the association. And we dare say that, without much urging, he stands willing to supply any want in the art line that falls within range of his ability.

Belmont-Hulbert Wedding.

Of course, wherever two or three were gathered together this week there was more or less talk of young Raymond Belmont's marriage to Miss Carolyn B. Hulbert of Middleburg, Va. The announcement came as a surprise, as most announcements regarding young Raymond's social activities do come. Miss Hulbert is noted both for her beauty and her horsemanship in the south, proving her to be a true daughter of her home land.

The Morgan Belmonts attended the wedding. It was at their wedding a year ago in Newport, in fact, that the young people first met. Mrs. Morgan Belmont, who continues a most popular leader in the junior set, both in Newport and New York, acted as matron of honor, as did the bride's sister-in-law, Mrs. William P. Hulbert. Morgan Belmont was the best man. The ceremony was held on Wednesday at the home of the bride's mother.

The August Belmonts, senior and junior, attended the wedding, and the groom's attractive stepmother, who was Eleanor Robson, was made much of by the local celebrants.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt is to go to Texas early in October to pay Col. Vanderbilt a visit, and it is said that several other cottagers whose sons and husbands are still at the border will follow her example. Mrs. Vanderbilt will be accompanied by her son, Cornelius Jr., who is greatly interested in his father's command, and who helped materially last summer in establishing service stations in Newport and Narragansett for the collection and distribution of reading matter for the boys at the border.

Informal Affairs of the Week.

Among the informal affairs of last week were the dinner and dance given by Robert Walton Goelet on Monday and the farewell dinner given by the T. Suffern Tailers at Honeysuckle lodge for Mrs. Tailer's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Brown, who left the following day for an autumn cruise on their yacht, the Ballymena. Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Sturgis gave a dinner Tuesday evening and on the same evening Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred Pierson Jr. gave a dinner dance. At Sea Verge Wednesday evening Commodore and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry entertained informally for their house guests, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Goelet Gerry, who had arrived the day before from Warwick Neck on their steam yacht, Owera. And Thursday evening Mr. and Mrs. Percy R. Pyne of Morristown were the guests of honor at a dinner given by Mrs. Dulaney Howland.

For Governor's day, Thursday, at the Newport County fair, held at Portsmouth, there was a large crowd of society folk. Gov. and Mrs. J. Livingstone Beeckman are easily the most popular residents of the executive mansion that Rhode Island has known in many, many years. They have entertained a great deal during the summer. At the fair the governor presided and contributed a number of prizes. H. A. C. Taylor of Boston was also a generous donor of prizes for live stock.

Teaching Society to Fly.

William Earl Dodge, who has created a new sport and considerable excitement during the summer by taking the most adventuresome of the colony's matrons over the bay with him on his airboat flights, has decided to turn the publicity he has thus gained to good account. He now proposes opening an aviation school in Florida, at Jacksonville, early in December. Here he will gladly teach society how to fly, both high and low, and will purposely keep his clientele exclusive. Among those who have flown with him are Mrs. Perry Belmont, Mrs. R. Livingstone, and Mrs. John Hanan of Narragansett. At Jacksonville he is to have the assistance of the Hon. Frederick C. Eden of England, and in his fleet he will have five aeroplanes and two flying boats.

From such charitable impulse as has been left over the Newport hospital is just now benefiting. Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney sent a check for $10,000 to the directors the other day to start a fund which should cover the cost of needed improvements in the buildings, and three days later Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor added $5,000 to it. This generosity excited Neighbor John H. Hanan at the Pier and he promptly announced a contribution of $50,000 for the building of an emergency hospital at Narragansett.

To Stenographers and Typists

Whom We Could Not Accept

To all those stenographers and typists whom we have had to turn away in the last few weeks because of lack of space, we wish to announce that we have DOUBLED THE SIZE OF OUR QUARTERS and can now accommodate all who apply, in either day or evening classes, provided they can meet our educational qualifications. With our enlarged quarters, now occupying practically the entire floor of this building, and with our enlarged staff of expert instructors, we are in better position than ever to help every ambitious stenographer and typist WHO WANTS BIGGER PAY.

If you are one of those who are still working for $12 or $15 a week, if you are one of those who learned the old-time methods, if you are one of those who would like to earn $25, $30 or $35 a week, come in and we will show you how to DOUBLE YOUR PAY. We will show you how to GET BIGGER PAY IN THREE MONTHS. We will show you how you can start the New Year on January 1st with a real position, a position that pays a GOOD SALARY instead of just a bare living.

Bear in mind that what you get in your pay envelope depends entirely on the law of supply and demand. As long as your employer can get dozens of typists and stenographers just as good as you are for $12 or $15 a week he won't pay you any more. There's no reason why he should. But if you can do twice as much work as the average young man or woman, and do it better, you can have almost any salary you want.

It doesn't take three months long to roll around. If you had entered this school last May or June you could be getting from $5 to $15 a week more NOW, just as our graduates who started then are NOW DOING. If you start now you can earn from $5 to $15 a week more by next January. And you don't need to leave your present position. You can do it by evening practice and study. We'll furnish you a typewriter free for home practice if you wish.

The Arnsan NEW METHOD of DOUBLE SPEED TYPEWRITING will enable any stenographer or typist to DOUBLE his or her pay. It makes typewriting an art. It makes it fascinating. It takes away the drudgery. It takes away the nerve strain, the back strain, the headaches and nervous exhaustion. It does away with the useless motions, the wasted energy. It enables you to write 80 to 100 words a minute more easily than you now write 30 or 40. It makes you an expert. It makes you a master. It gives you your choice of the good positions and gives you a salary worth working for. Don't stay in the small salaried class. It's easier to earn $25 a week than it is to earn $15. PHONE, CALL OR WRITE.

IN the RELIGIOUS WORLD

ARCHITECT — EMERY STANFORD HALL.

The proposed new Immanuel Baptist church.

Dr. Gunsaulus Reopens Central Church Today.

By the Rev. W. B. Norton.

DR. GUNSAULUS.

CENTRAL church, which meets in the Auditorium theater, East Congress street and Wabash avenue, and of which the Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus is pastor, will begin services today at 11 o'clock. Dr. Gunsaulus will preach.

Tomorrow at 10:30 a. m. Dr. Gunsaulus will deliver the address at the first union meeting of the various ministers' associations in the First Methodist Episcopal church, West Washington and North Clark streets. Dr. Gunsaulus will speak to the ministers on "Beecher, Brooks nad Parker," dwelling especially on the character and work of Dr. Parker, long the pastor of the City temple, London.

During the vacation period Dr. Gunsaulus spoke at sixty-eight chautauquas and just before returning home supplied the pulpit of the Fifth avenue Presbyterian church, New York, in the absence of Dr. J. H. Jowett.

While Central church was closed for the summer, the benevolent activities were kept up, the Rev. Dr. Clarence T. Brown being in general charge.

The Theological seminary of the Evangelical Lutheran church, located at Maywood, just outside the Chicago city limits, is to celebrate its quarter centennial, Oct. 1 to 5. The Rev. Elmer F. Krauss, D. D., president of the seminary, is in charge.

The celebration will begin Sunday evening with vespers at 8 o'clock, followed by an illustrated history of the seminary by the Rev. William Eckert. On Wednesday evening and Thursday morning the exercises will begin with a procession in academic costume from Wagenhal's hall to the commons. On Thursday there will be an all day program, in which future plans for the seminary will be described by President Krauss, visiting clergy, and alumni.

Among the speakers at the celebration will be Prof. H. E. Jacobs, dean of the Philadelphia Lutheran seminary; the Rev. G. Franklin Gehr, president of the Pittsburgh synod, and the various members of the faculty and officers of the seminary at Maywood, the Rev. G. H. Gerberding, the Rev. H. W. Roth, the Rev. Alfred Ramsey, the Rev. H. B. Reed, the Rev. Joseph Stump, and the Rev. Samuel Wagenhals.

Archbishop G. W. Mundelein's appointments for the next three months have been given out by the chancery office. Sunday, Oct. 15, the new St. Jerome's church in Rogers Park will be dedicated. Oct. 22 the St. Joseph's parish, Joliet, will celebrate its silver jubilee. Oct. 29 he will bless the new school at St. Rita's church and administer the rite of confirmation. All of the other appointments on Sundays and week days are for confirmation.

German Catholics will tender a reception today at 3 o'clock to Archbishop Mundelein in the St. Alphonsus athenaeum. The reception will be in charge of the Chicago Distrikts-Verband. Michael Walsdorf, president of the Distrikt-Verband, will make the opening address. The Rt. Rev. Mgr. A. J. Thiele, pastor of St. Aloysius' church, will offer prayer. The Windthorst Maennerchor, Hugo Edelmann, director, will furnish the music. The following will speak: The Very Rev. August Ahlert, C. SS. R.; the Rev. Peter Crombley, O. F. M., chaplain of the Joliet penitentiary, and Peter Biedermann. The Rev. Francis J. Epstein, moderator of the Distrikt-Verband, will introduce Archbishop Mundelein, who will then speak, the Rev. George Eisenbacher making the closing prayer. The Distrikt-Verband has a membership of 10,000.

The young men in many Chicago churches will be addressed today by representatives of the Young Men's Christian association on "Growth," physical, mental, and spiritual. Other churches will be addressed next Sunday. The desire is to induce young men to fit themselves for better positions of usefulness by night study at the Y. M. C. A.

An extension in social service is to be provided by the Chicago Training school for city, home, and foreign missions, 4949 Indiana avenue, by offering to young women who work in the daytime evening classes in English or in any study where a group of five or six desire to take advantage of the offer. The instruction is free.

The architect's drawing of the new City temple, which is to be erected on the site of the Immanuel Baptist church, Twenty-third street and Michigan avenue, under the leadership of the pastor, the Rev. Johnston Myers, is here published for the first time.

The plans call for the continuance on a larger scale and with increased convenience of the forms of service which have been features of Immanuel church. There are, for instance, to be dining facilities for business men, for working girls, and for unemployed men, with separate entrances and under conditions adapted to the financial ability or lack of financial ability of the classes served. For years Dr. Myers has fed 1,000 and more men at breakfast during the cold season. This work will be continued, the men entering the spacious basement entrance from the rear. The business girls have also met in the church for noon lunch and social enjoyment and rooms for their use will be provided. Business men, men's clubs, or committees will be catered to on a more expensive scale.

A unique feature will be the arrangement by which the main auditorium, which will seat over 2,000, can by pneumatic action be reduced to an audience room seating 1,200 and by another touch of a button made into a room seating 625, each auditorium being complete. Two other separate chapels seating 125 each are also provided for.

The building will be ten stories in height. On the first floor front are four stores. The church with the various auditoriums and chapels will occupy the first four floors, back and above. Offices and apartments to rent to suitable religious or philanthropic organizations or business enterprises will occupy the remaining stories.

"The control of the City temple," Dr. Myers said, "will be much like the control of the University of Chicago, where the majority of the trustees and the president must be Baptists, but where the institution is for the use of every creed and class. It will be a great religious department store. The financial situation of the building project cannot be made public just now, but it is good. The plans of the architect call for an expenditure of $650,000.

"I have been pastor here for twenty-two years and have seen the neighborhood transformed from one of the best residence districts to a boarding house and now to a business district. There is no need here for a family church, but there is a need for such an institution as we propose to build. The church membership is 2,500, many of them nonresidents and transients."

The Rev. David Beaton, formerly pastor of Lincoln Park, now Wellington Avenue Congregational church, Chicago, and president of Redfield college, Redfield, S. D., will begin preaching services next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock in the De Luxe theater, Wilson and Clifton avenues. His organization will be called the Community church. He will then return to Chicago for the opening of the Rock River conference in Olivet church on Oct. 3.

Bishop Thomas Nicholson of the Methodist Episcopal church will preach today at the central Illinois conference, First church, Peoria, and next Sunday at the northwest Indiana conference at Greencastle, Ind.

Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, will be next Thursday, although the celebration of it begins Wednesday evening. Some Jews observe Friday also. According to the traditional Jewish calendar the date marks the year 5677. Jewish practice requires the day to be observed with religious solemnities ushered in by the blowing of the Shofar, or ram's horn, in itself an expression of the seriousness of the day as a time of crisis. The day of atonement, Yom Kippur, falls on Oct. 7.

The interdenominational committee of the central west for missions will provide for a course of lectures on missions by Mrs. D. B. Wells in the Corinthian room of the Masonic temple, Randolph and State streets, on next Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. The lectures will be at 10:30 a. m. and 2 p. m. daily. There are seventeen denominations coöperating and there is no fee charged.

The one day's income fund for missions of the Protestant Episcopal church reached $60,000 on Sept. 10, when the last report was made. To avoid a deficit Bishop Daniel S. Tuttle, presiding bishop of the church, has sent out an appeal that the amount might be increased to at least $122,000 by next Saturday, which marks the close of the fiscal year. Last year $400,000 was given.

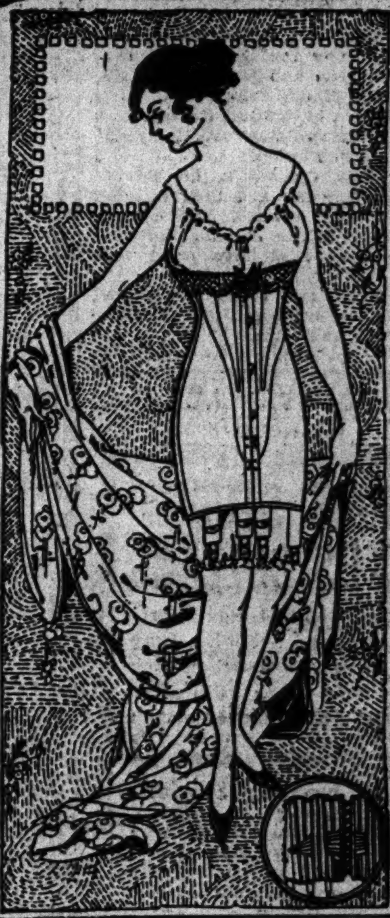
Permit Us to Introduce the "Nemo Standard's" Latest Corset Model to Chicago

—Third Floor—Center—



The woman who understands and appreciates what "Nemo Standard" assures her of, and we believe most women in America do, will come here and secure a pair of "Back Resting" Corsets if they suffer from backache—it is quite the most important of the many "Nemo Standard" improvements, for it brings relief alike to the petite woman as well as the medium and large woman, a new health feature that is indeed most restful if you have a tired or weak back—brought about by the added supporting bands, as shown in the illustration—these bands follow a set of muscles which tire easily—supporting and strengthening them.

This same model also has the "Wonderlift" bandlet to support the organs of the lower abdomen, an underbelt attached to the corset sides under the corset and fastening in front, out of sight entirely, that holds up weakened physical organs or too much flesh which drops naturally by the law of gravity. On many women a corset has a tendency to pull down on the figure by the end of the day. The bandlet corrects that. This model compels a graceful, erect carriage when standing or walking.

The Back-Resting corset, style 338, for slender girlish figures, $3

The Back-Resting corset, style 350, for medium figures, 3.50

Two Self-Reducing Models That Are Great Favorites

Style 326—A wonderful "Nemo Standard" Corset for reducing the stout figure. Women who wear this model tell us every day that the new corset they buy is one size smaller than the old—low bust, extra long skirt, splendid for controlling large thighs, made in Coutil, sizes 21 to 36, at.............................. 3.50

With Each Brass Bed You Buy, a $15 "Georgia" Upholstered Box Spring at $3.75

—Ninth Floor—

This is by all means the most astonishing offer ever made in Chicago, one that in all probability will never be repeated, a daring move on the makers' part to have us sell 300 "Georgia" upholstered box springs in a day's time—and add still greater laurels to our great Annual September Sale, for the makers feel that the word of mouth advertising will more than repay them in greatly increased sales. No one can sleep on one of these luxurious, upholstered box springs without telling some one of their wonderful comfort and restfulness.

The "Georgia" is a high grade box spring that is very resilient, carefully made in every detail over fitted and glued selected hardwood frames, 72 double coned, oil tempered steel springs, tied with highest quality Italian hemp twine, upholstered with lower layer of wood wool, upper layer of cotton felt and sanitary topping and covered with genuine Manchester twilled ticking, finished with heavy welt edge.

Autumn Opening Display—Millinery, Coats, Suits, Wraps, Waists, Furs

Most women are all curiosity to see what the new season has brought—to see if Paris still holds the sceptre in the realms of Fashion. In all Chicago there will be no display of Millinery and Outer Garments that will be of more intense interest to the great majority of women than the fascinating display revealed on our great Second Floor for Opening Week, tomorrow. The originality of Europe, the ingenuity of our own American talent, the adaptations made by clever minds to serve best the purpose of the American woman, have evolved utterly different things in line and trimmings, a vivid touch of color, a gleam of gold or silver, the charm of fur, all in a brilliant, beautiful display that is lavish in its diversity of styles, that holds something to please every woman's taste; a display we welcome you to, knowing that you'll find it helpful indeed—and bringing many opportunities to save as well—we expect you.

New Imported Pattern Hats

Brilliant and beautiful best explains this fashionable array of imported pattern hats from the famous designers of Paris. Words fail in expressing the rare beauty of the colorings, quiet, subdued tones with just the right amount of brightness to relieve a too dull effect. Shapes you'll go into ecstasies over, the large flaring, broad, drooping brims that lend such a picturesque air, the piquant little shapes trimmed high that give an added height if you are short, all styles that are most becoming because of their plainness, which makes them lend themselves harmoniously to most every type of face. The trimmings are gorgeous ornaments, iridescent metal buckles, soft, lustrous flowers, feathers, furs and the rich goura and paradise that in themselves make a hat beautiful. Space prohibits our telling in full all their wondrous beauties, but come Opening Week and feast upon their loveliness. Priced specially for this event at $20.00 and up to $125

Choosing a fall hat from this group at $9.50 to $15 will be a pleasant task. Such harmony of color and such clever styles! Wide effects are mostly in evidence, but the smaller ones are quite popular; dark colors prevail throughout, with touches of bright shades for trimmings. We are proud of this group for Opening Week, at $15.00 down to.......... 9.50

Actors, and Plays, and the Like

By Frederick Donaghey.

CAREFUL scrutiny of this page of THE TRIBUNE will discover a picture of Miss Jeanne Eagels, who will tomorrow evening make herself known in Chicago as the principal actress in "What's Your Husband Doing?" Miss Eagels has already had a measure of tentative celebrity elsewhere; she was the actress of the noctambulist in "Outcast" in the companies passed up by Miss Elsie Ferguson, and last season took part in the [illegible] revival in New York City of Haddon Chambers' old play of "The Idler."

Miss Ferguson's new medium, hitherto called "A New York Girl," suggesting musical comedy, is to be known as "Shirley Kaye," suggesting a Ziegfeld terpsichoreister. The Shirley of the new play is, however, a drawing room person.

If the Garrick bookings do not depart from the present schedule for that theater the season there will, when Lew Fields leaves, be devoted to musical shows in this order: "The Princess Pat," "Katinka," "The Passing Show of 1916," "Very Good, Eddie!" and the Al Jolson piece, "Robinson Crusoe Jr."

Mr. Morosco sends word that he simply must put part of the money he made with "Peg o' My Heart" into a new theater in Chicago; that he has selected "one of the most desirable corner sites in the Windy City, and the deal will probably be consummated within the next ten days." And so on, per formula. Professional layers of odds are divided as to whether the city hall, the Conway building, or the Hotel Sherman is to be torn down to make room for the new playhouse. Mr. Morosco has as much real use for a new theater in Chicago as Riverside has for a merchant marine. The business of theatricals in Chicago is only now finding its angle of repose as a result of an adjustment of the disturbance that followed the insane multiplication of theaters between 1907 and 1911. The Princess, Cort, American Music hall, and Blackstone were built within that period; while the La Salle, Chicago Opera house, Olympic, and the Great Northern were changed from popular-price to $1.50 and $2 theaters. Added to Powers', the Illinois, Colonial, Garrick, Grand Opera house, and Studebaker, this growth was absurd in respect to the city's increase of population—figured at less than 35 per cent in a decade. These data take no account of the 1907 houses where less than $1.50 was charged for the best seats, as the Majestic and McVicker's.

McIntyre and Heath, Willie and Eugene Howard, and George W. Monroe will be together in a new Winter Garden extravaganza.

Miss Cathleen Nesbitt, the beauty of the Irish Players on their first Chicago visit in 1912, will not be the actress of the luckless wife when "Justice" is given in Powers'. She is to have the principal part in a light comedy called "Hush!" to be staged by Winthrop Ames, who has resumed his rather precious sort of managerial activity.

The final installment of E. H. Sothern's autobiography, in the current Scribner's, contains a hitherto untold anecdote of Richard Mansfield's early days on the London stage. Mansfield, a minor and unknown member of the cast of a new play, was given a small part to rehearse. The part was what is known as a "feeder" or "straight"; that is, it was designed as a mere foil for the parts of importance. One of these was given to the chief comedian of the company, an actor of great popularity and much "side." As rehearsals progressed, he noted that Mansfield's part seemed by far the better—due, he was keen enough to realize, to Mansfield's sheer inventiveness in elaboration. The comedian protested to the author that the parts should be exchanged. The author reluctantly consented, whereupon Mansfield politely handed over his copy of the text, gorgeously annotated as to the "business" he, himself, had devised, and, taking up the comedian's despised rôle, proceeded so to elaborate that, in turn, that he scored the chief success at the premiere. However, Sothern explains, the play failed, and so Mansfield's work was wasted.

New things this week on the New York City stage will be the Hattons' farce, "Upstairs and Down"; an operetta by Emmerich Kalman, composer of "Sari,"" called "Little Miss Springtime"; a play by the author of "A Pair of Silk Stockings," Cyril Hartcourt, named "The Intruder"; and a comedy by Grant Stewart, "Arms and the Girl."

James T. Powers regards with such contempt the opinion of New York City playgoers that he will risk his own money on a tour in "Somebody's Luggage," a farce rejected there. He is believed to be in possession of a great deal of money because of consistent insistence in the past that somebody else should take the risk when he performed.

George M. Cohan is completing a play in which Chauncey Olcott will perform. It will be without songs, it is understood.

"Go to It!" a forthcoming musical farce, is said to be a to-date revision of Hoyt's "A Milk-White Flag." Hoyt's piece, by no means his best, made some cruel though effective fun of the national guard; but this hardly seems to be the time for that sort of thing. The Hoyt notion was a militia regiment of which every member insisted on being an officer, so that it was necessary to hire a private in order that the others should have somebody to command.

Jack Lait has had a new play conditionally accepted by the manager who produced "Help Wanted." The condition is that Mr. Lait, having provided an appealing scenario, shall take the trouble to write the play.

Frank Fogarty, a popular retailer of Irish jests in the varieties, took part in the opening performance of the new entertainment in the New York Hippodrome. He and Mr. Dillingham, the manager, were in quick agreement that the theater and Mr. Fogarty were not attuned, and the performer was paid $2 000 not to report for the next performance.

Israel Zangwill, who has as yet failed to write the "big" play expected from him when he turned his attention to the theater, is doing short pieces for the music halls.

Burns Mantle's New York Letter

NEW YORK. — [Special Correspondence.] — Taxicabs that spring up like umbrellas in an unexpected shower, have taken care of New York's playgoers during the strike of motormen and their friends. Longacre square has not changed save that it is easier to get from where one is to where one wants to go.

With the number of clanging surface cars reduced to practically one every ten minutes, the traffic coppers are able to take much better care of those approaching their evening's entertainment on foot—such as transients from the nearby hotels, first nighters from downtown apartments, idle actors from side street boarding houses, and dramatic critics from goodness knows where.

Again there is little appreciable change in the scene when the great outpouring occurs near the witching hour when cafés yawn and playhouses give up their deadheads. Again the walks are thick with the mass of folk reaching from curb to building line, and the air is filled with chatter.

There is a difference, however, inside the theaters. Audiences that might have been encouragingly large have been discouragingly small, particularly in those houses in which the future of the attraction hangs in fateful balance. There are, strikes or no strikes, many of these during a theater season. Plays that have not the good fortune to register an overnight success or die a quick death, plays that, gaining a half hearted welcome, send their producers scurrying next day to the cut rate ticket brokers for temporary [illegible].

The first night assemblages, however, have been quite as usual. That strange, cosmopolitan crowd made up of [illegible] boulevardiers and those who occupy the other seat; idle actors and their friends of the moment; faddists with a real love for the theater and a real respect for the drama; professional reviewers for newspaper or magazine, and transients from the hotels—this crowd does not change much. Strike or no strike, these amiable celebrants arrive somehow, clutter up the lobbies and overflow the flagging in front of the temple.

This crowd was present in force the other night to welcome William Collier, the eminent farceur, when he made his annual bow as an imperturbable hero plunged into difficulties and forced by the exigencies of the plot to extricate himself without that first aid to farcical heroes, the ready lie.

William this year is putting to the test the theory that it is impossible to tell the absolute truth for twenty-four hours without being murdered on the spot. His play is called "Nothing but the Truth," and it was fashioned by James Montgomery from a short story by Frederick Isham. Montgomery is the lad who wrote "Ready Money" some seasons since.

The play has already been seen in Chicago. Collier takes the part of the junior partner in a firm of stock brokers that owes its success to the minor deceptions practiced by its salesmen, who are given to misrepresenting the stock they sell. They should not do it, insists William. It is just as easy to be honest and successful as it is to be successful dishonestly.

The white lie, objects his fattest and most successful partner, the business lie, in other words, is a recognized aid to trade, and if it were not so accepted the whole business structure would topple. Out of which argument grows one comedian's insistence that he can tell nothing but the truth for twenty-four hours and the wager of the other that he cannot. Such suspense as the plot gathers is based on the fact that the money which Collier puts up belongs to his fiancée, a fact it is necessary he should conceal from her.

In an effort to force him to lie, those on the other side of the wager pin him down to all manner of confessions. He

Playbills of the Week

NEW THIS WEEK.

Blackstone—"What's Your Husband Doing?" with Maclyn Arbuckle and Thomas W. Ross, who between them made up 40 per cent of the black type actors in the Cort theater run of "The New Henrietta." The new play is a farce by George V. Hobart. Miss Jeanne Eagels will be in the principal feminine part. Tomorrow night.

Princess—"The Unchastened Woman," with Miss Emily Stevens. This play, by Louis K. Anspacher, was one of the popular successes of last season in New York City, which community incidentally bestowed great praise upon Miss Stevens for her acting in the character of the title. Miss Emilie Polini, remembered with joy from "Hindle Wakes," and H. Reeves-Smith, a sound actor when properly cast, are of Miss Stevens' support. Saturday night.

CONTINUED OFFERINGS.

Grand Opera house—"The Cohan Revue: 1916" goes tonight into its final Chicago week. Bully travesty!

Illinois—"Pom-Pom," with Miss Mitzi Hajos and Tom McNaughton. Fourth week.

Garrick—"Step This Way!" with Lew Fields and a good soubrette, Miss Margaret Farrell. Final week.

Powers'—"Please Help Emily!" with Miss Ann Murdock, Ferdinand Gottschalk, and Charles Cherry. Light farce about an audacious hoyden. Second week.

Olympic—"Common Clay," with John Mason and Miss Clara Joel. Indoors melodrama about a house not in order. [illegible]th week.

Cort—"Fair and Warmer," a farce designed to be known as shocking. 'Tisn't. Eighth week.

Chicago—"The Blue Paradise," with Cecil Lean, Miss Vivienne Segal, Miss Cleo Mayfield, Miss Frances Pritchard, and Teddy Webb, all of whom are entertaining in an imported operetta far above the Vienna average—so far, at least, as that average reaches the American stage. Second week.

VARIETY ENTERTAINMENT.

Palace Music hall—Bankoff and Girlie, a familiar team of dancers, return tomorrow as the leaders of the changed program. They will this time have a corps of assistants in their "turn." Others will be Bonita and Hearn, the Meyakos, Savoy and Brennan, Milt Collins, the Nine White Hussars, the Primrose Four, and D'Amour and Douglas.

Majestic—Miss Phyllis Neilson-Terry, seen in this theater last season in excerpts from "Romeo and Juliet," comes back tomorrow to perform a scene from "Hamlet." Claude Gillingwater and Miss Julie Herne will do a new dramatic sketch, "The Frame-Up." James Cullen, Willie Solar, Hufford and Chain, Schooler and Dickinson, and Rice, Elmer and Tom will be in the bill.

McVicker's — "Continuous" program.

Great Northern — "Continuous" program.

Columbia—Billy Watson [not the one who slides] and his company for the week starting this afternoon.

WEST SIDE THEATERS.

National—"The Old Homestead."

Imperial—"Somewhere in France."

Notes on the Opera

Miss Geraldine Farrar's associates in the Auditorium performances of Humperdinck's "Children of the King" ["Königskinder"] will be Clarence Whitehill, Frances McLennan, James Goddard, Wilhelm Beck, and Miss Marguerite Buckler.

Giordano's "Andrea Chenier" will be sung in the first week of the season, which will start Nov. 13 with, it is tentatively announced, Meyerbeer's "Le Prophete," with Charles Dalmores and Miss Julia Claussen. Miss Rosa Raisa will make her first reappearance in the Giordano opera, which, it would appear, has never been sung in Chicago. It was made known in the United States as long ago as 1886, when it was sung by a company organized by the famous Col. Mapleson, then making what proved to be his final attempt to "come back" as a factor in opera. The performance of "Andrea Chenier" will serve as the occasion of the first appearance of two members of the Auditorium company—Giulio Crimi, tenor, and Giacomo Rimini, baritone.

John McCormack will not be a member of the company for the new season, so far as may be learned from the roster; but the Auditorium management, dispensing with the activities of a middleman, will "present" the tenor in a recital on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 22.

Egon Pollak, who scored so decisively last season as conductor of the German operas, is to resume his activities with the company and will be in direction of "Children of the King." The opera orchestra will assemble next week. It is to be taken out previously to the opening of the Chicago season as part of the Ellis organization, which is to sing two operas on a brief tour of the middle west.

Burns Mantle's New York Letter

is the young person Mr. Briggs knows who is always taking the joy out of life. He is forced to tell one young woman that she sings terribly and thus breaks up an otherwise pleasant evening.

He confesses to a prospective customer that the stock offered him is worthless. Tells his friends exactly what he thinks of them and admits to his sweetheart that he has loved others before he loved her. When she presses him for the name of the creature he chokes and finally gulps, "Maude Adams!" Which, curiously, is the biggest laugh he gets all evening. Finally he wins both wager and fiancée.

There is a new musical comedy at the Casino—"Flora Bella" is the title, and Lina Abarbanell the star. But the most interesting item connected with its production to me is that when the book needed building up, as all musical comedy books do, the management called in Dorothy Donnelly to help with the job. Now Dorothy is by way of being quite a serious young person. You may recall that some seasons ago she made Bernard Shaw's women her chief study and the emotion torn heroine of "Madame X," was, for another stretch, her most intimate companion. So you would not naturally think of her as one to add jests to a musical comedy expected to appeal to Broadway.

And yet whether Dorothy is the responsible party or not, "Flora Bella" has more suggestion of sanity in its plot and a better quality of quips in its enfoldment than any similar entertainment offered so far this season. A hero who classifies himself as one of the "six best celibates" is not intellectually unbeatable as heroes go, but he is at least unusual. And a comedian who asks quietly why it is that all fat women talk baby talk evidences certain gifts of observation not common to musical comedy as we get it here. "Flora Bella" is rather a legitimate successor to the late and long lamented "Merry Widow."

There is also, I may add, for the benefit of those buyers just starting for these eastern revels, a certain amount of dancing by bare limbed nymphs in this production that caused even the most blase of the first row seaters the opening night to grow restless. They were naked [the nymphs, not the first rowers] as one review explained, from the soles of their feet to the finale of the next act. Which is considerable nakedness, even for the Casino.

George Arliss, still remembered in this center of short memories as the remarkably good actor who once played Disraeli, has not met with so promising a reception with "Paganini." This is Broadway's first view of his performance as the eccentric violinist, though it is already quite familiar to other sections of the country.

And it would appear to be Broadway's verdict that while Paganini may have been a most interesting exhibit in his day, he is not a great success as the hero of romantic comedy, seeing that he is, in the person of Mr. Arliss, both an unromantic figure and a frigid lover. Due credit was given the actor in the reviews for the care and detailed finesse of his drawing, but though friendly, they were also lukewarm.

NEWS [illegible]

Miss Ray Cox of Chicago and Miss Bessie Wynn, easily recalled from the nights of "Babes in Toyland," are sister-performers in a new London revue, "With Flying Colors." Little Tich, a dancing dwarf who was in one of the old Chicago Opera house extravaganzas, "The Crystal Slipper," nearly three decades ago, also takes part in the revue.

Denis Eadie, one of the best actors in London, has been unable to make a go there of "Disraeli," which Chicago regarded with so much awe, and has taken up Faversham's part in "The Hawk," a new version of which has been prepared by Edward Knoblauch. Knoblauch, an American by birth, is asking the British government for citizenship.

Brandon Tynan's play of rococo Irish romance, "The Melody of Youth," having failed in Boston, is what is known as all through. The author has been its principal actor.

Jack Norworth, become a London idol since he was last in Chicago, is returning to this country, where he knew celebrity chiefly because he was a Nora Bayes husband. Miss Bayes herself feeling the tug of Something Higher that soon or later invariably disturbs our most entertaining comic performers thinks that she ought to respond, and so has placed herself under the management of Henry Miller.

Lorin Raker, who last season played the 17 year old Jimmy in the final act of "Pollyanna," is Booth Tarkington's selection for an actor for the name part of the footlighting of "Penrod."

Plays junked a generation ago are being rescued for the entertainment of Paris. In concurrent revival there a few weeks ago were "Miss Helyett," the Audran vaudeville in which Mrs. Leslie Carter performed as long ago as 1891; "Hotel du Libre Exchange," in which, as "Hotel Topsy-Turvy," Miss Marie Dressler and Eddie Foy were co-stars in the late '90s, and "Rip Van Winkle," a light opera which Planquette composed back in the days when his "The Chimes of Normandy" was new to us.

WITH WONDERFUL UNANIMITY THE CRITICS AGREE

DAILY NEWS. Amy Leslie. Cecil Lean has a gay American sense of humor which goes over the plate and lets them all come home.

TRIBUNE. Percy Hammond. "The Blue Paradise" is a good show [illegible] Romance and pretty music. "Auf Wiedersehen" irresistible.

EXAMINER. Ashton Stevens. "The Blue Paradise" is a refreshing answer to the eternal question "Where Shall We Go To-Night?" It is musical, it is comical, it is artistically produced and the cast is unaggressively good.

HERALD. Felix Borowski. The music is altogether charming. It alone should bring popularity to "The Blue Paradise." Not often in recent seasons has a comic opera organization sung as well.

JOURNAL. O. L. Hall. Cecil Lean comes home with a precious gift—"The Blue Paradise." * * * Distinctly different and distinctively good. * * * Cleo Mayfield is easily the prize beauty of the season.

AMERICAN. The Optimist. Wave after wave of hearty laughter and furious handclapping. * * * The Messrs. Shubert have finally made the big attractive Chicago Theater the center of the city's stage.

POST. Charles Collins. A brilliant performance.

ADVERTISE IN THE TRIBUNE.

The Selig-Tribune—Semi-Weekly.

The World's Greatest News Film.

In the two issues this week are shown:

Number 76

SHE'S A ROOKY!

"Patriotism for women!" is the cry among women. For the purpose of further stimulating this laudable enthusiasm, at Narragansett Pier, R. I., was opened recently the National Service School with a large enrollment.

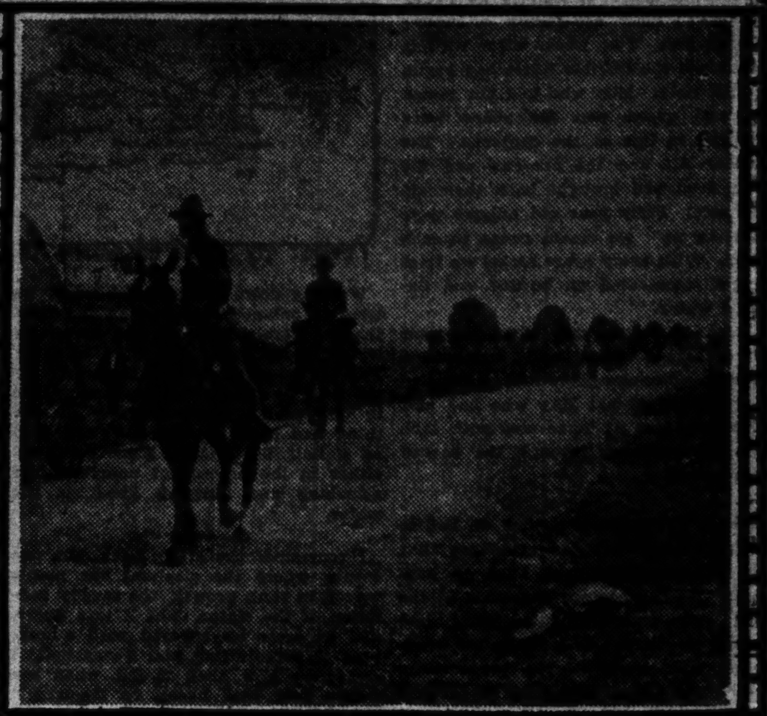
AMMUNITION! AMMUNITION! AMMUNITION!

The scene is Verdun, France—a scene of struggle, suffering, and bloodshed. And as the fight wages, trainload after trainload of ammunition and supplies of all kinds arrives to be rushed to the firing lines by motor transport wagons.

Number 77

DEPOSITORS "RUN" ON BANK.

With the collapse of four small private banks in Chicago, depositors in other institutions became panic-stricken, and on one of the banks a run took place which might have easily resolved itself into a riot had it not been for police interference.



OUR BOYS ARE MARCHING!

An inspiring sight is the "hike" of 15,000 troops from San Antonio, Tex., to Austin, a distance of ninety miles. This constitutes the first movement of an entire army division, with full equipment, since the Civil War. Tramp! Tramp! Tramp! Our hearts beat in unison.

The Latest News from Movie Land.

By Mae Tinee.

LEONARD GOES TO LASKY.

"BOB" LEONARD fans will be surprised to learn that their hero has deserted the Universal forces and will appear in Lasky productions. Somehow no one ever thought that Bob Leonard-Ella Hall combination could ever be broken up.

Ben Turpin just doesn't care what he does or what is done to him. The latest little stunt was to allow himself to be saturated with gasoline and be set on fire.

Our own Harold Lockwood nearly said "good-by earth" the other day when, while playing in a polo scene, his horse fell on him. Did it faze him? Dear heart, no! Says his publicity man: "He brushed the dirt from his white polo habit and calmly requested that a fresh pony be brought."

Geraldine Farrar has left Los Angeles for New York, having completed for Lasky the motion picture version "Joan of Arc."

Contrary to honored tradition among many movie stars that the anouncement of marriage means the death of popularity, Anna Little and Allan Forrest have been deluged with joyous letters and telegrams of congratulation.

The Shelby sisters, consisting of Margaret Shelby and Mary Miles Minter, have recently finished their sister act in a feature picture just completed by the American company. Both have leading rôles.

Pathe has gone back to "one feature a week" policy.

It is reported that Nat Goodwin contemplates building a motion picture studio on his ranch in East Los Angeles.

When the "legits" fall for the movies they fall hard, don't they?

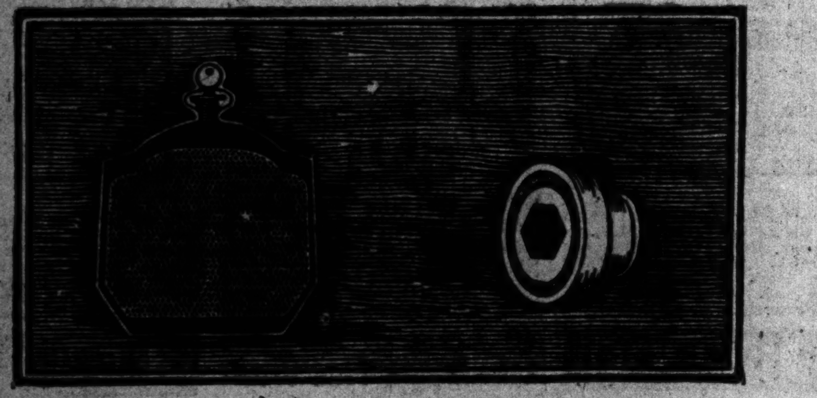
And Irene Hunt is married to Lester Scott. She is with the Universal company, where Mr. Scott is employed as director.

Latest report has it that Kolb and Dill are about to start a film version of their stage success, "Lonesome Town."

Matt Moore is no longer with Universal. Watch this column for his future plans.

And whether we believe it or not, but they do say that Miss Camille Astor, who will support Helen Ware in "The Garden of Allah," has secured the services of a Japanese woman formerly employed in the household of the emperor.

They say Blanche Sweet is just awfully happy because Marshall Neilan is to direct her, and that Mr. Neilan is most awfully happy, too.



Shapes! You distinguish "this" from "that"—you separate one thing from another by its shape

A radiator and a hub cap—minor details! But by them is the Packard known—even to the man who looks as he runs.

Two surface distinctions!

But the big thing that sets off the new model Packard from all other cars is the Twin-six motor—the most important advance that has ever been made in motor development.

A vital distinction that!

And one that is vitally important to every owner or prospective owner of a motor car.

Two blocks of six simple, sturdy cylinders have replaced the old heavy block. And thereby is the Packard made sprightlier, speedier, safer—and more economical of gasoline.

You should know more of the new Twin-six than its surface distinctions. Let a Packard man show you the things that count—now. The prices are $2,865 and $3,265, f. o. b. Detroit.

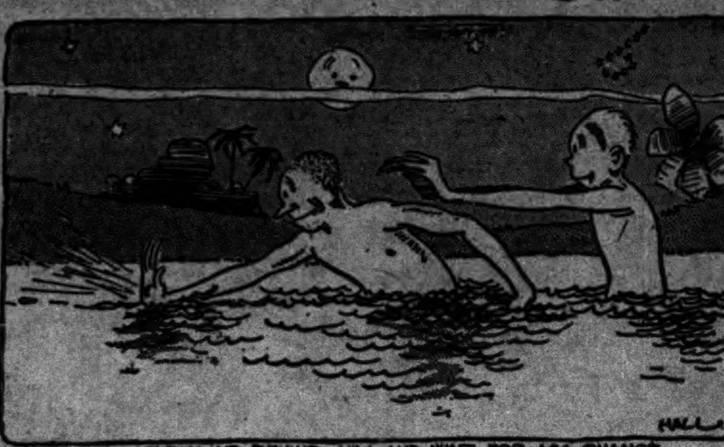
"SOLDIERING WILL MAKE A TEN-YEAR-OLD KID OUT OF YOU, TOO" concludes ONEY FRED SWEET



I BEGAN TO SNEAK UP BEHIND HIM AND WAIT FOR MY CHANCE

We used to hear the remark a good many times down there in Texas: "Soldiering will make a man out of you." Maybe so. I'm sure, though, that soldiering will make a boy out of you—a 10 year old kid.

Have you pictured soldiers as heavy drinkers? They are—heavy drinkers—of soda pop. Two weeks after we left Springfield the terrible thirst had begun to take hold. Men who had not tasted red and green pop for years were standing in line at the canteens. The outdoor life and the exercise and the army food had brought back their kid appetites. Fifty year old officers were "setting up" ice cream cones to each other. With every spare nickel we tried to get intoxicated on bottled and flavered water.

It was the same way when we came to crabapple trees and watermelon patches. Stenographers and clerks and floorwalkers of last May who had half grown children at home vied with each other in sneaking through the barbed wire fences.

But it was the first chance we had to go swimming that gave evidence that we had surely dropped back to boyhood. No one seemed conscious of the fact. The months of soldiering had caused the change to creep in too gradually; the sneak to the "swimming hole" was taken as matter of factlike as the bugle calls to go to bed and get up and hustle to drill.

When I say we "went swimming" I don't mean that we donned bathing suits and sat around on a beach half the time. What I mean is that one of our bunch—a lawyer back in Chicago; no other, in fact, than Big Bill Scherwat, who took such long steps on the march—had discovered a "hole" half a mile down the railroad track and "back in the woods to the right."

We were at Luxelo, Tex., at the time, bivouacked for the night.

"How deep is it?" I says to Bill, as he sneaked back into our company street, keeping his campaign hat well over his eyes so as not to give away the fact that his hair was wet. You would think he had just returned to his mother's kitchen.

"It's about up to my waist, but it would be over your head," says Bill. "Keep quiet about it. We're going back again after dark. Say, I found some of the swellest choke cherries just the other side of the railroad bridge. See, my teeth are all black from 'em."

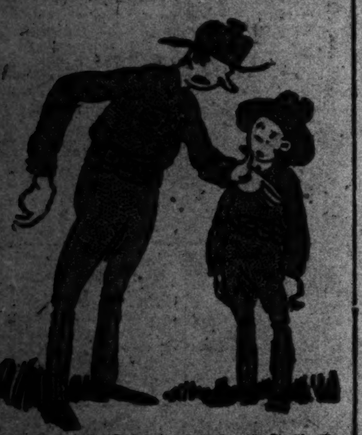
"Give me some," I says.

"Find 'em yourself," poohs Bill.

"I'll trade you that Indian arrowhead I found for some of 'em," I begged.

"Hm, Mm," mumbled Bill, pulling some more of the cherries from the waist line of his khaki shirt.

Well, I tipped it off to Corp. Beadle from Sears-Roebuck, and to Sergt. Hudson from Armour's, and to Schroeder, who had been the only man in the company to enlist as having the profession in civil life of "laborer," and just as soon as it grew dusk we hit it for the railroad tracks. Corp. Fitzpatrick, who used to sell automobile tires, was along in the bunch, too. "Fits" hadn't been a corporal long. He was always yelling out "Heads up!" when we lagged in march. I was glad to see him along. I had wanted for a long time to get even with him without his knowing anything about it.



"IT'S ABOUT UP TO MY WAIST, BUT IT WOULD BE OVER YOUR HEAD," SAYS BILL.

You would never dream that any one in the bunch had been anything but soldiers all their lives. A few months before I had not known a fellow in the bunch; now it seemed as if I had spent my entire existence with them. It was seldom that they recalled civil life.

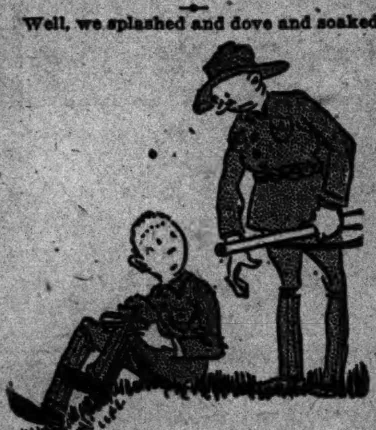
Walking down the railroad track, we tried to balance ourselves on the rails. Insects were singing in the peculiarly leaved trees along the right of way. The red had gone out of the west. By the time we reached the swimming hole it was plumb dark. Secretly as the thing had been tipped off, it appeared as if half the brigade must be there, either in the process of undressing or splashing and gurgling about in the water.

I remember the stony bank, the one corner where the elephant ear plants waved in rank growth, the muddy condition of the water. But it was water, and we were all covered with a mixture of perspiration and Texas soil. I remember how good it felt when my weary feet first began to "squash" into the slimy bottom of the place and the mud began to trickle up between my blistered toes. It took me back down the years. It took us all back down the years to those kid "swimming holes" of the bygone.

I could pick out Corp. Fitzpatrick. He had had his hair shaved close to the scalp a few days previously. He was trying to see how far he could splash water with the palm of his hand. His hands were Mexican black, as were his arms up to his elbows. I began to sneak up behind him and wait for my chance. The chance came. He was keeping one eye on his clothes over on the darkened bank—I am sorry to say he was wise in doing so—and I had both my hands on that close cropped head of his and he was ducked in the water before he had an opportunity to catch his breath. By the time he came up—spouting muddy water and howling—I was lost behind a dozen other naked forms.

I shall never forget how soothing the water of that round hole felt to the foot blister, how it trickled along through the grime of the marsh in little rivulets down our backs. I remember how Private Brown and Corporal Cheney discovered some strange Texas insect that jumped along on the water and how they quarreled over turns to tantalize it. It was a green insect with yellow wings. Texas was full of highly colored, strange insects that constantly lived close to us—ate with us and slept with us. Whenever a new species was discovered we always gathered about to study its antics. Nearly everything we classed either as scorpions or tarantulas. Picture the old head of your department sitting on the ground and poking a stinging lizard around with a stick and you will have some idea of how thoroughly we had become kids again.

Well, we splashed and dove and soaked ourselves until the guards with guns silhouetted themselves on the river bank and then we all started to beat it to get—wet skinned—back into our khaki again.



"WARM AS CANTEEN WATER ON THE MARCH," I SAYS.

A guard caught me just as I was hastily putting on my leggings wrong side out.

"It's my orders to get you guys out of here," he says. "How's the swimming?"

"Warm as canteen water on the march," I says. "There's a few sharp stones over there at this end and over there by that tree where the moss hangs you sink pretty deep in the mud, but it's the best swim I ever had in my life."

Coming back down the railroad track we picked up stones and threw them at the telephone poles. Private Schultz came across a toad, but he wouldn't touch it because "it would give you warts," and Private Reynolds wanted to bet his pudding the next time we had any that he wasn't afraid to eat a grasshopper."

"Wait a minute," requested Corporal Braham when we came opposite the initial carved water tank, "wait a minute while I shake the water out of my ear," and as serious as could be he began to hop around on one leg.

Kids, that's all we were when we minded the captain's order to get to bed promptly by 9:30 that night.

"You're lucky Fitzpatrick didn't know it was you who ducked him," says Private Coffee there in the darkness of our tent. "He'd keep you on 'details' for a week."

"If you'd tell him," I says, "you wouldn't be nothing but a tattletale and the first chance I got I'd tell something on you."

The list of Scripps-Booth owners abroad reads like a roster of European royalty and of men celebrated the world over for achievement. Precisely the same sort of people prefer it abroad and in America. It happens to be the one American car which appeals strongly to people of this sort the world over. In its list of foreign dealers covering every large city in the world outside of the enclosed war zone, not one has ever previously handled an American car. They have mainly represented such cars as Pugeot, Mercedes, Daimler, Rolls-Royce and Hispano Suiza or Isotta Fraschini. Scripps-Booth sells on the same floor as these world's master cars—a fit floormate suffering naught by contrast.

The foreign driver opens the throttle wide between cities, knowing no speed laws, and delighting in maximum performance as well as in pride of appearance. That Scripps-Booth popularity is continually increasing abroad but proves its adaptability of performance.

The Size of Copernicus Compared with the Area of Chicago

Position of Copernicus on the Moon

VOLCANOES OF THE MOON.

COPERNICUS, while not the largest, is one of the most conspicuous of the extinct volcanoes on the moon. It stands alone in the center of a vast plain, rearing its gigantic peaks and ramparts four and one-half miles into the sky. Even a tiny telescope suffices to show it, while the white lava which surround it can be seen by the unaided eye, looking like a white spot on the right side of the nose of the "man in the moon."

This volcano was in eruption late in the brief history of the moon as an active world. It lies on the intersection of two cracks, places where the crust broke under the strain of shrinking and contracting. Here at the crossing the resistance to the internal fires was weakest. The vapors and steam below burst up with explosive violence, blowing and tearing a hole in the solid rock fifty-four miles wide and ten miles deep. Hundreds of cubic miles of rock and ashes were blown upward, to fall in jumbled heaps just out of range of the explosions.

The ring mountain thus formed piled high and collapsed under its own weight, the lower parts pushing out laterally, and the whole subsiding into a series of terraces. Some parts slipped bodily back into the crater and the rest lay tottering on its brink. Violent moonquakes and convulsions of the land further shook it down until it was in some sort of stable equilibrium.

When the vent at last was free of the restraining rocks, the hot, highly fluid lava rushed and spurted up. Before the crater was filled its pressure burst the wall asunder at the northern and southern points and the lava poured forth in sheets over the surrounding plain for hundreds of miles. After a while the force of the lava was spent, the molten lake in the crater sank down into the bowels of the moon again, and the vent became choked with the cooling rock. At length what was left of the lava solidified into a level sheet on the floor of the crater.

Once again were the fires destined to burst forth, although the second eruption had but a shadow of its former intensity. The vent was blown clear and five volcanic cones were built up from the ashes and cinders hurled out. The largest was a peak two and one-half miles high, a large mountain alone, but insignificant beside the large volcano. At length even these efforts died out. A few expiring quakes and tremors rent the rocks afresh, a few vapors of arsenic and sulphur ascended from the depths to discolor the edges of the giant cracks and chasms, and Copernicus, as a volcano, was extinct.

There it stands, century after century, a solitary giant upon the plain. The sun rises once a month, creeps across an airless sky as black as ink, and sets. The earth above stands still in the sky. The landscape is one of a world which has never known life, a scene of utter desolation unknown and unknowable upon earth. Every rock, fragment, and bit of powder lies as it fell. Ages pass by the thousand, but nothing ever happens. Copernicus is a dead volcano upon a dead world.

ANDERSON'S FIRST NOVEL.

"WINDY M'PHERSON'S SON" is the title of a first novel by a Chicagoan, Sherwood Anderson. It is for the first half of it at least, an obvious imitation of Theodore Dreiser's "The Financier," without the unassailable reality of Dreiser. The mechanics of Sam McPherson's leap from a penny poverty in a village to million affluence in Chicago is rather creaky in this day of realism. When Mr. Anderson doesn't try to tell a story, though, and merely chronicles the reactions of Sam McPherson toward life, the paragraphs are convincing. Sam McPherson is one of the rare characters in fiction who realize that a stone wall in life is a stone wall and not a paper hoop that with some literary swashbuckling and word prancing can be jumped through without the slightest injury. When the stone wall confronts him, he walks around it—and that's what most of the Sam McPhersons really do in the world.

Fortier Jones, author of "With Serbia into Exile" (Century), was studying at the Columbia school of journalism when the call for helpers in Serbia came. He enlisted at once in the Columbia relief expedition, starting in June, 1915. He was soon transferred to the Christian Herald Bosnian expedition and he stayed with them—technically — until the evacuation of Serbia began, early in October. After that and during the entire course of the Serbian retreat to the Adriatic, Mr. Jones was in charge of a party of English nurses. When he finally reached Rome after the retreat he had not seen a bed for seven weeks. He has gone back to work in war scarred Europe as a member of the United States embassy staff at Petrograd. While he is there he is to serve as a member of the commission headed by Dr. Edward T. Devine of the Survey, which, under the joint auspices of the German and Russian governments, will report on the condition of interned German and Austrian subjects. The commission is being financed by the United States government.

Edmund H. Eitel, James Whitcomb Riley's nephew, secretary, and literary executor, is getting together his uncle's letters for publication. He has already made copies of some 2,000. If you have a letter from James Whitcomb Riley write to Mr. Eitel in care of the Bobbs-Merrill company, Indianapolis. He is also interested in gathering up reminiscences of his uncle, quaint sayings, and anecdotes. Perhaps you remember hearing James Whitcomb Riley talk or had the good fortune to have a chat with him. Mr. Eitel is writing a biography of James Whitcomb Riley, too. I saw the shelves of the vault filled with material when I went down to see the gentle old poet last fall when he had his great birthday party which the state helped him to celebrate. The biography will not, however, be finished for a while.

"The Hilltop on the Marne" (Houghton-Mifflin) was one of the little volumes about the war that found its way into the hearts of many readers. The author of that book, Mildred Aldrich, has written another book, influenced by the war, but not about it. In a charming group at a house party a few miles outside of Paris war is the one topic which is taboo and at the suggestion of one of the party they start to telling stories. "Told in a French Garden; August, 1914," is the record of those stories. All the time, as the days go by, the war comes nearer and nearer until—and that's the story itself of "Told in a French Garden" (Small-Maynard). It will be published Oct. 28.

"The Truth About the Theater" (Stewart & Kidd), the anonymous message of "one of the best known theatrical men in New York," is, as truth always is, unpleasant to those who like being blinded with sentiment. It sounds true enough, and it certainly would act as a deterrent to any aspirant for the pottage of stardom or playwright successes, and since it is the avowed mission of the writer to make his readers think first and act afterwards, perhaps the book will not have lived in vain, despite its anonymity.

The Hector Munro ambulance corps, the famous little organization of a dozen volunteer helpers which operated in Belgium under the leadership of Dr. Munro of London, can probably claim a secure place in literature. For not only were a number of well known writers, including May Sinclair, Christina MacNaughton, and Arthur Gleason, members of it, but it has actually been a theme of five books. The corps was able to conduct its work at the first line because it was under the military leadership of the son of the Belgian prime minister, and it thus had opportunities to do work of an exceptional and often spectacular kind.

"The Mystery of the Hated Man and Then Some" (Doran) is another of those gay, frivolous mirths which James Montgomery Flagg casts once in a while into our soggy lives. It's what most men call "crazy stuff," the little paragraphs that he writes to go under the pictures that he draws, but what do most men (and women) know about humor that doesn't begin with "Pat said to Mike"?

C. N. and A. M. Williamsons are the authors of "Where the Path Breaks" (Century), which was published under the pen name of Capt. Charles de Crespigny. So many reviewers said that Florence Barclay must have written it that Florence Barclay sent out a denial of its authorship through her publishers. When the book was published in England the names of its authors appeared on the title page. The name of it there is "The War Weddings." So that's all settled.

As recorded by a writer in the London Chronicle, the German press takes pride in announcing that a well known publisher in Jena will publish a "Monumental Edition of 'Hamlet'" in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the poet's death. "We Germans," writes the publisher in his prospectus, "find ourselves in Goethe's 'Faust' and in Shakespeare's 'Hamlet' in our proper metaphysical environment, in that longing for heaven which rises over all terrestrial anxiety Shakespeare is one of ours. In the midst of war we are now paying homage to his genius by an edition of 'Hamlet' the like of which has never been presented by an English publisher to Shakespeare's own countrymen." This "Hamlet" will be in the familiar translation of Schiegel and Tieck, printed in the style of the eighteenth century, from a special fount of English eighteenth century type, and sold in half French Morocco binding for about $5.

In Joseph Pennell's "Pictures of the Wonder of Work" (Lippincott) he says of the impressive river scene he names "The Jaws, Chicago": "Here is the real Chicago. This was the first of these jaws I ever saw; they are horrible, but fascinating, and typify the power, frightfulness and get there of that mighty village; picturesque beyond words, terrible beyond description, fascinating beyond belief. The most amazing thing in the most amazing mixup in the world—Chicago."

W. Somerset Maugham, author of "Of Human Bondage" [Doran], has come over from England to attend the rehearsal of his new comedy, "Carolyn," which Margaret Anglin will play in this season. He is a novelist and a dramatist only as a recreation. In fact, he is a surgeon. He has been serving on the medical staff of a French hospital at the front, and part of the time acting as an ambulance driver, which occupation, he confides, "as a whole, was better than being a doctor."

Pslams of Life

by J. P. McEvoy

THE ICEMAN.

Gone the snicker from his smiler
  Fled the chortle from his map,
He was sweeter than a huyler,
  Now he is a bitter chap;
On his cheek the salt of sorrow,
  In his glim a crystal tear,
No nepenthe he may borrow
  Far or near!

Once his voice was hale and cheery
  And a smile suffused his phiz,
Now he's desolate and dreary
  As he droops about his biz;
To the great gray green Limpopo
  Where the fever trees do grow
And they raise the fierce El Ropo
  He would go.

For that aura of contentment
  Which encompassed him about
Is a pall of drab resentment
  For his tide is going out;
Soon we shall not hear him shouting
  On the porch as was his wont—
You didn't know I cared, sir?
  I don't!

Quality First

ONLY 14 CHALMERS CARS PER DEALER ARE LEFT IN THE GREAT $56,000,000 "RUN"

We are but one of 1600 Chalmers Dealers. There are only 20,000 of the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers left. So if we had to take our chance on an even allotment among the 1600, we'd probably get only 14 more of them.

The run on this car has been mastodonic.

We're lucky to have one left, because the Chalmers Company set out to build only $22,000,000 worth last fall.

These were all built and delivered before the first day of summer came.

Then we got the Chalmers executives to add 10,000. These were pretty well cleared up before the first day of September.

Now we have just got them to build 20,000 more —making 48,000 of the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers all told—just $56,000,000 worth of one model.

So you see it has been like a regular "run" on a bank. Only instead of a bank it has been a car. And a truly magnificent car, too.

We attribute the "run" to the wonderful quality in the car.

We find men and women are buying better and better cars every day. Just go down among your acquaintances and note how many of them are driving better cars than they used to.

Probably 75 per cent of our sales have been to people who have owned lower priced cars. There's a peculiar and interesting kind of a pride in owning a regular car. A man said to us the other day:

"I bought a 'price' car a year ago. It was a one-year car. It looked fine and drove well for a while. I got 10,000 miles out of her, but she couldn't stand the racket. I'm all done trying to buy price tags. I used to say I'd never pay more than a certain sum for a pair of shoes.

"I ventured $2 beyond the price one day and, thoroughly to my surprise, I got such a better fit, so much more comfort, so much more in looks, and so much more in wear, that I just figured I'd been a blame fool all these years.

"It's the same way with cars. You get just about what you pay for in a cheap car. It's like advice. I'm paying $300 more for this Chalmers than I paid for my old car. But I can see right away I'm really getting $500 more in car and quality. Besides I'm driving a regular thoroughbred."

There are lots of men like our friend. People don't shop around much in buying meat for the home. A rib roast is a rib roast. If one butcher has rib roast at 2 cents a pound less than the other, it's safe to venture that it's 2 cents a pound inferior meat.

Quality—and the quality scale of life—that is what the American people are seeking today as never before, in our casual observation.

And a great help is a quality car like the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers. Forget that the price is only $1090 Detroit. The price is not determined by the President of the Company, nor by the Chief Engineer. The price is determined by cost accountants. That accounts for the odd figure $1090.

The sum of $1,000,000 has been added to Chalmers factory equipment since the birth of the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers about a year ago. Added why? Just to make each car a little better than the one that went out the factory door ahead of it.

P. S.—To remind you—the Chalmers Company is building 20,000 more of them. This model will be continued without change in design into next season.

BUTTER-KIST

The Crispy, White Pop Corn with the Toasty Flavor

Was there anything ever so good, so appetizing, so tender, as fresh, crisp Butter-Kist? All the old fashioned ideas people had about pop corn have vanished, now that pop corn is made the Butter-Kist way. No half done, mushy kernels, no unpopped ones, no chaff. Butter-Kist is made in a scientific way,—no human hands touch it. Each clean, white, fluffy morsel just melts in your mouth.

Oh, it is so good, you just have to have more. And the more the better, for Butter-Kist Pop Corn is one of the most easily digested and nutritious of foods. When other foods fail, Butter-Kist Pop Corn is often the only food people with delicate stomachs can eat.

Butter-Kist makes a light, wholesome, easily prepared meal for the children or for grown-ups.

When you're a little tired and hungry, do try a bag or more of fresh Butter-Kist. You will then see how restful, refreshing and nourishing it is,—and you will always want Butter-Kist, only Butter-Kist, and more Butter-Kist.

Start Eating Butter-Kist and Insist on Butter-Kist

If it isn't made in the Butter-Kist Machine and sold in the Butter-Kist bags and cartons with the Butter-Kist kids on them it isn't Butter-Kist. Don't confuse ordinary pop corn with Butter Kist. You never will if you once taste Butter-Kist. You can get Butter-Kist made in Butter-Kist Machines, and sold in Butter Kist packages, 5, 10 and 25 cent sizes, at any of the following stores:

Will you be so kind as to furnish me with details of the best route from Chicago to Houghton, Mich.?

H. G. J., Chicago.

Sheridan road to Evanston, Wilmette, Highland Park, Lake Forest, or Fort Sheridan, where the Green Bay road should be followed north through Corliss and Franksville to Milwaukee, 90 miles; then go through Port Washington, Sheboygan, Manitowoc, Green Bay, 121.8 miles; Oconto, Marinette, Menominee, 60.1 miles; Stephenson and five or six little villages to Spalding, 41 miles, thence northwest through several small villages to Iron Mountain, 31.3 miles; Randville and other small villages to Humboldt, 53.1 miles (Humboldt is an abandoned town, but marks the place where one branches off from the Marquette route and takes the road to Houghton). Then go through Michigamme, Three Lawes, Nestoria, L'Anse, and two or three small villages to Houghton, 86.7 miles. The roads throughout will be found good, fair, and some bad in spots, but with caution one can get through without serious trouble.

Kindly tell me through the medium of your interesting and instructive column how many automobiles are in use in the United States? How does the number compare with the figures for last year? What are the four leading states, and how many cars are registered in each? A. McJ., Chicago.

There are approximately 3,000,000 automobiles in use in the United States, that number including both pleasure cars and trucks. The number is far in excess of the 1915 registration. That the number is increasing at an astonishing rate is shown by the fact that there are 568,077 more cars in use today than there were on Jan. 1, 1916. Between Jan. 1 and June 30, 1916, the increase which had taken place was not far short of the total increase for the year 1915. New York, Ohio, and Illinois are the banner states for automobiles, each one having gone over the 200,000 mark. New York has 299,165, Ohio 231,135, and Illinois 209,757. Pennsylvania comes fourth with 169,082. The other states which have more than 100,000 cars registered are California, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Indiana, Massachusetts, and Texas. Twelfth on the list is Wisconsin with 90,000 machines.

Could you please tell me through your touring bureau, what is the best road to take from Chicago to Medford, Wis., via Milwaukee? How are the roads and what is the mileage? What rate of speed is allowed in the state of Wisconsin?

E. A. Wallan, Chicago.

Medford is not located on any of the regularly charted automobile routes, and the best I can do is to direct you as far as Abbottsford, Wis., where it will be necessary to inquire your way the rest of the distance. Medford is fourteen miles due north of Abbottsford. The Yellowstone trail is followed from Milwaukee to Abbottsford. Owing to the bad condition of the Yellowstone trail section between Chicago and Milwaukee, via Kenosha and Racine, I should advise you to take Lincoln avenue as far as Lake avenue [which runs west from Wilmette. Then turn left to Deerfield and go north through Techry, Everett, and Upton, at which point the Milwaukee road is picked up and followed to the Cream City, 95 miles. At Milwaukee take the Yellowstone trail through Menominee Falls, Meeker, Schleisingerville, Theresa, Fond du Lac, 61.7 miles; Oshkosh, 19 miles; Dale, Redfield, Weyauwega, Waupaca, Amherst, Stevens Point, 79.1 miles; Mill Creek, Auburndale, Marshfield, Spencer, and Unity to Abbottsford, 58.8 miles. The roads will be found fair to good, with possibly a few bad stretches. The Wisconsin laws restrict the speed of automobiles to twenty-five miles per hour outside corporate limits, which means the open country.

I am planning to start about Oct. 1 on an automobile tour to Washington, D. C., and if consistent, would like to go by way of Indianapolis, Ind. You have mapped out two or three good routes for me this season, and if not asking too much would like to have you plan this one.

C. P. Ridgeway, Chicago.

Leaving Chicago, go south in Michigan avenue to Garfield boulevard, thence east through Washington park, Midway, Jackson park, South Chicago, Hammond, Hessville, Highland, Schererville, Crown Point, Shelby, Thayer, Roselawn, Rensselaer, Remington, Wolcott, Montmorenci, Lafayette, Frankfort, Antioch, Lebanon, Indianapolis, 198 miles. My opinion is that the best way to go from Indianapolis to Washington is to follow the Blue Book route through Columbus, Wheeling, Cumberland, Hagerstown, and Gettysburg. Leaving Indianapolis, go through Cumberland, Cleveland, Knightstown, Dunreith, Dublin, Cambridge City, Centerville, Richmond, Lewisburgh, Vandalia, Springfield, Brighton, Columbus, 171 miles; Reynoldsville, Hebron, Linnville, Gratiot, Zanesville, New Concord, Elizabethtown, Moristown, St. Clairsville, Bridgeport, Wheeling, W. Va., 128 miles; Elm Grove, West Alexander, Washington [Pa.], Beallsville, Centerville, Uniontown, Addison, Keyser, Grantsville, Frostburg, Cumberland, 133 miles; Martin's Mountain, Gilpin, Indian Springs, Clear Spring, Hagerstown, sixty-five miles; Leitersburg, Waynesboro, Fountaindale, Fairfield, Gettysburg, thirty-four miles; Littlestown, Westminster, Md., Louisville, Spikesville, Friendship, Glenwood Olney, Wheaton, Silver Spring, and Brightwood to Washington, eighty-three miles.

Please tell me how to proceed in driving from Chicago to Bloomington, Ill.

M. N. L., Oak Park, Ill.

Forest Park, Lockport, Joliet, Morris, Dwight, Pontiac, and Lexington to Bloomington, 140.5 miles.

As I am planning an automobile trip from this city to Port Wahington and Two Rivers, Wis., would like to have you advise me as to the best way to get there. If possible would like to go via Milwaukee. What is the distance?

F. C. L., Chicago.

Drive out Lincoln avenue to Lake avenue (Grosse Point) and then turn left to Deerfield road, continuing on same through Techry, Everett, and Upton, at which place the Milwaukee road is picked up and followed throughout. Milwaukee is ninety-five miles from Chicago. Continuing from Milwaukee, go through Lakefield Corners, Port Washington, Sheboygan, St. Wendal, and Manitowoc to Two Rivers, 91.4 miles.

I am driving a car equipped with a cone clutch, and have been having considerable trouble with it of late. What can I do to make the clutch engage more easily?

A. A. G., Moline, Ill.

If the leather facing is charred or worn too much it should be replaced with a new one, whereas if it has only become dry it may be softened with kerosene, neatsfoot oil, or castor oil. This should be applied to the leather facing. Sometimes harsh engagement is due to defective or imperfect clutch design, in which case it can only be eliminated by changing the clutch structure in some manner so that springs may be inserted under the leather or cork inserts applied.

Please let me know as soon as possible what the best route is to North Judson, Ind.

M. M., Chicago.

South Chicago, Hammond, Highland, South Gary, Hobart, Wheeler, Valparaiso, 51.6 miles; Malden, Kouts, Tefft, San Pierre, North Judson, 35.3 miles.

Kindly publish in one of your Sunday issues the shortest route from Chicago to De Kalb, and La Salle, Ill.

O. O., Chicago.

Maywood, Elmhurst, Lombard, North Glen Ellyn, West Chicago, and Geneva to De Kalb, 61.5 miles. To go to La Salle, continue from De Kalb to Rochelle, 17 miles, and then go south through West Brooklyn and Mendota to La Salle, 46.8 miles.

Kindly print in your Sunday department of questions and answers the best way to drive from Springfield, Ill., to Shelbyville, Ill.

V. N. S., Loveland, Ill.

Go through Rochester, Buckhart, Roby, Taylorville, and Assumption to Shelbyville, 72.4 miles.

Kindly tell me through the medium of your valued department the shortest and best route from Chicago to Twin Lakes, Wis.

W. S. W., Chicago.

MOTORS AND MOTORCYCLES

Road and Tramway to Make Yosemite Falls More Accessible to Motorists

Above is a photograph of Indian canyon near Yosemite Falls. The dotted line shows where the government will build the tramway for automobiles.

ANOTHER miracle of California road building is about to be wrought—this time by the federal government. Its setting is the heart of the Yosemite National park. It will slash distance, nip hours out of time, conquer mighty mountains, open this wonderland to a new view of itself, and bring added joy and comfort to touring humanity. It may be completed in another year. Eastern motordom will be a principal beneficiary.

From Westgard pass, grand central motor entrance to California, where much of the traffic from the east, traveling over the Midland trail and the Lincoln highway, comes in, the distance into the Yosemite valley proper is 178 miles. From a point just north of the valley the road makes a great loop of fifty-one miles to get in. From this point—Porcupine flat—to the valley is only six miles. There the government will construct a cutoff road a little less than five miles long, and a [illegible] feet tramway down Indian cañon to the valley floor. It will knock forty-five miles off that tortuous fifty-one, and nobody will appreciate it more than the motorist who has driven across the continent.

During the recent visit to the park of [illegible] T. Mather, assistant to the secretary of the interior in charge of national parks, with other officials, the subject was thoroughly discussed and the plans virtually decided upon. There is understood to be no question as to the necessary appropriation—$200,000—by congress. This is indicated by the fact that preliminary work is already arranged for, and construction of a power plant to operate the tramway is soon to be begun. The water of one of the many minor falls will be utilized to generate electricity. The cost of the work is considered inconsequential. Its value will be multiplied by the passing years. Its builders will be blessed by the passing automobilists.

The incline will have a drop of 3,000 feet, with uniform grade of 50 per cent, and double track. It will be capable of carrying 250 automobiles and their passengers in each direction daily, and its capacity can readily be increased. Its cables will be tested for many times the load they are to draw. The operating plant will be 1,500 horse power until more is required. Automobiles will simply be driven on the cars at the top or bottom of the tram and whisked up or down with celerity and safety while the occupants, without leaving their seats, enjoy the majesty and beauty of the scenic domain and the novelty of the ride. It will beat driving over fifty-one miles of rough, hilly road. The feasibility of the undertaking is established. Already at El Portal a tramway of similar dimensions, but used for freight only, is in operation. On this large logging cars are transported and a few weeks ago a heavy engine for a logging train was successfully taken up over it.

At the head of the incline the elevation is 7,000 feet. The valley's floor is 4,000. Porcupine flat is 8,000. In the first two miles above, the tramway will be a grade of 8 to 10 per cent. The remainder of the cutoff will be almost level. The long loop which it eliminates has difficult grades, trying on machines and drivers. Only one bad hill, near Lake Tenaya, will remain, and that can be overcome by a piece of construction on which engineers are now figuring.

Indian cañon, in which the tram is to be built, is a huge gorge with a magnificent outlook. It is about a quarter of a mile east of Yosemite falls, the 1,430 foot upper drop of which is the highest in the world, and nine times as high as Niagara. Because of a noble dome of polished granite rising between, the incline and falls will not be visible one from the other. On this dome a hotel, reached and made possible only by the tramway, is to be perched. From here sunsets as glorious as any on earth affords can be seen.

The new way will be a boon to communication between the land east of the Sierra Nevada and the coast; between California and the east, and between northern and southern California. And it will mean many thousand more visitors to the Yosemite each summer. This season forty to fifty cars a day went into the park from east of the mountains via the superb Tioga pass and the long road which is soon to be shortened.

Uniform Traffic Rules Imperative for Safety.

UNIFORM traffic laws in all parts of the country have become imperative, and it is up to the American Automobile association to assume the burden of the task in harmonizing the conflicting statutes of the several states, with particular reference to the city regulations. Through its legislative board the national body of motor car owners is giving renewed attention to the subject, and the problem and the policy to be pursued are thus set forth by Chairman Osborne I. Yellott:

"Each year the manufacturers are turning out a proportionately greater number of motor vehicles. Each year these motor vehicles are becoming mechanically more and more perfect, and therefore more used and useful. Each year thousands of miles of improved roads are being added to the improved road systems of our country. Each year our cities are adding miles of smooth paved streets. Each month sees our business houses adding to their equipment of motor trucks or substituting them for the horses previously used. Each week sees traffic on our roads and streets grow heavier and heavier. Each day sees hundreds of inexperienced persons in every large city added to the already large list of those authorized to operate motor vehicles on our public highways.

"The slow crawl of street traffic of twenty years ago has given place to the mad rush of traffic today. That traffic is daily becoming more and more fraught with danger—danger not only to the pedestrian on the street, but as well to those who themselves form a part of such vehicular traffic. These conditions imperatively demand that those whose duty it is to do the thinking for the users of our highways bend every effort toward a satisfactory solution of the traffic problems which have arisen with the growth of the automobile as a vehicle of commerce.

"Much thinking has already been done on this subject; the results are to be found on the statute books of our states and larger cities. But the diversity of rules adopted and in force in different sections of the country shows how far the problem is from being really solved. As chairman of the A. A. A. legislative board it will be my principal task to gather from all available sources suggestions looking to the framing of a set of uniform traffic regulations which will embody the best thought of the country on this most important subject, and present it to the members of the association as a step at least in the direction of a solution of the traffic problem."

How are the roads?

ACCORDING to reports from Blue Book scouts, the majority of the roads, especially in this state, are in excellent condition for fall touring. The report in detail follow:

Studebaker

The Man Who KNOWS Buys a Studebaker

THERE was a time when the buyer of a motor car would unthinkingly pay out his money for the first machine that appealed to his attention. In those days he did not KNOW.

But not so today. Not with a motor-wise public—today the buyer knows automobile values, he insists upon a full dollar's worth in return for every dollar he invests.

In this later day of real knowledge Studebaker has sold more seven-passenger Sixes, more seven-passenger Fours, than any other manufacturer in the same length of time. Today the man who KNOWS buys a Studebaker.

With over 70,000 of these cars now in actual use under almost every condition possible to subject a car—and 85 per cent of them being driven by men who previously owned other cars—it is evident that the Studebaker Series 17 SIX is the ultimate choice.

No other high-grade six-cylinder seven-passenger car ever sold so rapidly—because no other car of its size and horse power, at its price, ever offered so much in dollar for dollar value.

To equal the Studebaker SIX in power, comfort, roominess, beauty and quality you will have to pay from $200 to $400 more.

We urge comparison—because we know the Series 17 SIX represents the greatest value in all motordom. Come in now and see this car—ride in it—and know how it performs on the road. Put it to any test—and you be the judge.

ART

By Louise James Bargelt

THE IMPRESSIONIST SCHOOL.

IN the exhibit of British contemporary artists at the Art institute there are four impressionist landscapes by Fred Mayor. He is apparently a modern artist of the modern school of impressionism.

There are two popular prejudices against the impressionist school, which had its beginning in Paris in 1871 and derived its name from the cynical comment of the critic Claretie, who complained that everything was just a "daze of impressions."

One of these prejudices is that there is a too willful and unnatural exaggeration of color. Negative color admittedly pleases the average mind, and some impressionists do go color mad, giving plenty of ground in individual instances for the criticism.

Another prejudice is that they veer too much towards the eccentric and offer it in lieu of any real talent. I thought of this second criticism as I looked at the vague, indistinguishable outlines of Mayor's "Sunrise." It is eccentric. So eccentric that the clouds look for all the world like soapy masses glued to a canvas. If one could get sufficiently far away to secure a dim impression instead of a too detailed one, the effect might be different. But the span of a room at the institute is not sufficient to give this most necessary distance.

But lest one grow discouraged with impressionists and the memory of remarkable pieces of work in this line becomes too faint, one should go into the Ryerson loan collection of Monet's paintings which has just been rehung in a room near the British exhibit. There one sees impressionism in one of its healthiest, sanest, and most delightful manifestations.

Monet, who was one of the first fighters against conventionalism in those battles which were waged so fiercely in the '70s and '80s, believed there was much more color in nature than most people are aware of. And with his educated and keenly alert eye he elicited a number of shades and varieties of color which were not known before.

He fairly glories in the fierce sunlight of midsummer and permeates his canvases with a dazzling glow. He takes a castle in the sea and steeps it in so radiant a glory that one feels as if in some prehistoric time he must have been a worshiper of light and a lover of the sun.

Monet is a remarkable example of that school which Manet founded and now that the victories of the impressionists are complete and every artist is allowed a wide latitude in his interpretation of nature, it is a privilege to be able to see such a representative collection of his work. He is one of the poet painters of the nineteenth century along with Turner and Constable and his insight into nature has aided in winning for art a new and inexhaustible field of color, and light, and life.

The Chicago Architectural club, formerly known as the Chicago Architectural Sketch club, will have a "house warming" in its new quarters in the Boylston building, 332 Plymouth court, tomorrow evening. Having been organized in 1885, it ranks as the oldest organization of its kind in Chicago.

For several years the club has maintained rooms in the Art institute, but lack of space necessitated the change.

"Aida" by John Lavery

IN THE BRITISH COLLECTION AT THE ART INSTITUTE

The commodious new quarters will be kept open for members both day and evening, and arrangements are being made for serving noonday luncheons. A membership provides valuable opportunities for meeting architects, designers, and others high in the profession, true to its constitution, which states as the club's purposes "the mutual improvement of members and the advancement of art and architecture."

In addition to monthly lectures on historical, artistic, and other timely topics of interest to the profession, the club maintains rooms for its auxiliary Atelier Puckey, devoted to day and night study in architectural design. To this work Francis Willard Puckey, an architect of high attainments, has given his untiring attention for the last five years.

The club will also hold frequent competitions for prizes and a life class is to be organized this fall. Besides these offers the club has held an annual traveling scholarship competition, open to members, the winner of which is entitled to six months of travel in Europe. It is planned to continue this competition at the close of the war. Regular monthly entertainments, including smokers and dances, will be given, and, in addition to these, there will be informal Monday evening gatherings.

Robert L. Franklin, John C. Leavell, and Arthur Kimbell are on the membership committee and the officers are: Harry H. Bentley, president; Fritz Wagner Jr., vice president; Fred C. Stanton, treasurer; John C. Leavell, secretary. The directors are: Herbert E. Downton, Franklin Marling Jr., Robert L. Franklin, Archie S. Morphett, George L. Barnum, and Arthur Kimbell.

An exhibition and sale of pictures by James Bloomfield, late of London, for the benefit of the French and Belgian Red Cross relief funds will open tomorrow at the Moulton & Ricketts galleries. The subjects offered include a number of pastels and water colors of the Chicago river, in city parks and on north shore beaches, and sketches in and about Evanston, where Mr. Bloomfield is now living.

Your Policy Comes Packed in Four Cans

Do You Carry Insurance Against Punctures?

Did you know that some of Chicago's best-known financial and business men had organized a Company to insure you against puncture trouble?

The name of the Company and the name of the INSURANCE is TIREOID. Made in Chicago—Sold in Chicago—Guaranteed by a Company many, if not all, of the Directors of which are men YOU KNOW AND RESPECT.

If you have an unsealed puncture any time within SIX MONTHS (not to exceed in size that made by a THIRTY PENNY NAIL) the TIREOID INSURANCE will pay you either $10 or $13 or $16, depending upon the size of the tire you drive. THINK OF IT, actual INSURANCE against PUNCTURES for six months. If you have no unsealed punctures TIREOID INSURANCE costs you $10 or $13 or $16, depending upon the size of your tires, and you continue to enjoy TIREOID INSURANCE for a period of at least one year.

Absolutely No Chance For You to Lose a Penny

The worst thing that can happen to you under the TIREOID INSURANCE IS THAT you may have an unsealed puncture within six months, and in that case YOU ARE IMMEDIATELY PAID whatever TIREOID cost you. Is it worth $10 to you to be free of puncture troubles for 6 months? Have you ever put on a spare tire on a hot, dusty road or at night or in the rain? If you have you know that you'd gladly have given $10 to have been relieved of the work. TIREOID makes all this disagreeable work entirely unnecessary as you CAN'T HAVE PUNCTURE TROUBLE.

TIREOID IT SEALS PUNCTURES

MARMON 34

Talk with Marmon Owners

—Ride in this Luxury Car

IN common-sense ways like these you can learn the reasons for Marmon 34 leadership this year. If you are a buyer of a top-class car and know these facts, you won't be satisfied with less than the Marmon gives.

There are 300 Marmon owners in Chicago and vicinity.

Ask those whom you know (or get the names from us) how many miles per gallon this long, powerful car is averaging.

Ask them the mileage their tires give. And compare their figures with the mileage secured from the same kind of tires on other large cars of this class.

Ask them about the convenience of having but four grease cups on the entire car.

Men are finding these comparisons surprising. Many authorities last year would not have believed it possible to build a car of this size and power that would run at so low an expense.

But the Marmon 34 has come and broken through the accepted limitations.

Notwithstanding its long wheel-base of 136 inches and its 74 brake test horsepower, the Marmon weighs 1100 pounds less than comparable cars.

Its scientific construction and the extensive use of aluminum have now taught men to expect more attractions in a Luxury car with less expense in operation, just as modern steel trains are stronger, safer, and more luxurious and efficient than old-time wood trains.

Modern men who want the modern car either own the Marmon 34 or will, we believe, investigate it.

The TRIBUNE'S WEEKLY ALMANACK

SEPTEMBER

After Frost.

A CLEAR night with the harvest moon riding high and the wind, which had been bitter from the northeast, stilled; a glorious night with a tang which suggests the danger growing things face; a hasty covering of late vegetables and a scurry back to the warmth of the hearth where embers redden against the back log.

White frost the next morning; blackened leaves and pitifully drooping blossoms where they had been upstanding foliage and flower. An early frost is a Herod-like thing which strikes down the innocents and destroys their future, safe except for this devastation which comes with a still wind and a clear sky and a dropping temperature. But, with the damage done, the warm, misty envelop of autumn incloses the yellow and brown earth—yellow where the golden rod stands and brown where the seeds of the helianthus wait upon the warblers.

Black and white warblers are in the thickets. The returning hermit thrush rustles the fallen leaves. The berries of the wild rose and of the false Solomon's seal are red. Wild crab-apples tempt any one inclined to spicy jellies. The wild grapes are nearly gone.

Over all, in the late day—over yellow, gold and brown—is the kindly haze of early autumn, a veil of illusion softening fact, and, as the night closes in, a chill which makes the fire of logs a shrine for a household gathering.

Japanese "Farmers" Watch Uncle Sam Build Forts Near Los Angeles.

By Tom Lewis.

OUT on the Pacific coast Uncle Sam's engineers are building a fort. The name of this fort is McArthur. It is located on Point Firmin, overlooking the harbor of Los Angeles. Out on this same Pacific coast Japan's wily "farmers" are cultivating a field. The field has no known name. But it, too, is located on Point Firmin, overlooking the harbor of Los Angeles.

Toiling in the bowels of the earth, America's experts are placing the concrete foundations for huge guns. They are answering the call of preparedness. Laboring in the blistering sun, Japan's "gardeners" are futilely tilling the arid soil. They, too, have harkened to the call of preparedness.

Only a few hundred feet separates the workers. On one knoll are the serious and busy builders of one of Uncle Sam's newest and most powerful coast defense fortifications. On another knoll are the suave and smiling husbandmen of the orient. While one shift works another shift watches.

The hill which the urbane Japanese are bent upon cultivating is the acme of desolation. It is wind swept and cactus infested and is utterly devoid of water. Dry and lifeless tomato vines bear mute testimony to the futility of farming.

A little more than two years ago the American government heeded southern California's demand for adequate protection of the harbor of Los Angeles. Emplacements for sixteen inch guns were ordered. A site was selected. The plans were drawn. It was about this time that innocent looking Japanese farmers made their appearance on the hill overlooking the harbor. They began leasing land. The Sepulveda estate controls hundreds of acres of land in this vicinity.

The Japanese said they intended to go in for dry farming. They were willing to pay $15 per acre as a yearly rental for this bleak, black, and broken land. The Sepulveda estate being willing, it was so arranged.

So the Japanese came and continued to come. They were bright looking men and women, roughly clad, but possessed of more than average intelligence. They set to work and they worked diligently. Where the United States government employés worked eight hours the Japanese "farmers" spent sixteen hours in the field. Cultivation went on apace, and the Japanese gardens grew and expanded and stretched themselves over acre after acre of the cracked and sun baked hills. The harvest was meager, but the Japanese were never known to complain.

In the course of time the encroachments of the "farm" reached the line of demarcation. The tomato vines, dead and dying, entwined their tentacles about the cactus plants growing in the soil of the United States military reservation. Distant but a few hundred feet American army officers discussed the plans of the fort. Crouching close to the ground the Japanese nourished their tomato plants. To all intents and purposes they were wholly disinterested. They were "dry farming."

From time to time strangers appeared in the Japanese fields. The newcomers spoke excellent English, even though they were roughly clad, and they, too, worked in the "gardens." On Sundays there were many visitors.

A cluster of houses sprang up like weeds in a garden. These were little more than shacks, but a street was laid out in crude fashion and a part of the field was a field no longer. It had assumed the proportions of a village.

The village is in a direct line with the United States fortifications, now in the building. Moreover, the fort is less than one-half mile distant. The construction towers, rising like huge elevators from the crest of the hills, are plainly visible from practically every house in the settlement. Not so very long ago visitors were allowed to come and go as they pleased on the military reservation. Venturesome Japanese climbed the hill, visited the shafts, and looked down upon the handicraft of the American workmen.

No one paid any great amount of attention to the quiet and sun browned Japanese. The American laborers regarded them as friendly farmers, and thought of them without suspicion, if they thought of them at all. Meanwhile the Japanese continued to harvest their lean crops and kept their own counsel.

But when Capt. Sage came to Los Angeles from the Philippines certain changes were made at the fort. He was a youthful looking officer, mild mannered and courteous, but he had a fund of good ideas. And he let it become known that he was opposed to promiscuous visiting on the military reservation. Cameras were taboo and visitors must come supplied with the necessary passports.

It has been said that Japan of all nations understands the trick of guarding her own secrets. Her men smile when they drive a bargain, they smile when they are starving, they smile when they are persecuted, and they smile when they contemplate death. But they never divulge their secrets. Theirs is an impenetrable stoicism.

If you were to visit the village in the shadow of the fort these selfsame characteristics would confront you. Stoicism and urbanity are apparent on all sides. When the writer of this article approached the village he was aware of the fact that he was the cynosure of all eyes. But the eyes were peering from behind partially closed doors and their owners remained in concealment.

One hundred and twenty-five Japanese make their homes in and around this village, but with one notable exception there was not a human being within the confines of the settlement. This was a woman, far down the street, digging with a hoe in a tiny garden. Undoubtedly she was not alone, but she was the one Japanese of all this number who was visible to the naked eye.

When approached the woman maintained a stubborn silence, while her bronzed face took on the outward evidence of an enigmatic smile. She shook her head when pressed for an answer to simple questions and resumed her work in the garden as an indication that the interview was at an end. She fled precipitately when the writer disappeared behind a quantity of baled hay.

In the distance a man was loading a wagon with hay. He sought to drive off when questioned, but smiled blandly when asked if he could speak English. His smile broadened when a photograph was requested, but he shook his head vigorously by way of protest. His teeth were smooth and regular and showed unmistakable signs of the very best dentistry. Still smiling, he pointed toward a house near the end of a village street. Then he mounted to the wagon seat, urged his horse forward, and quickly disappeared over a hill.

The house indicated proved to be the home of the only man in the village who would admit that he could understand the English language. He was C. Nakama, a man of polish despite the sordid surroundings, and it was clearly evident that he was looked upon as a leader among the villagers. His raiment was rough and his feet were shod with sandals of straw, but when he said "Thank you," in acknowledgment of a proffered cigaret, his accent was perfect and his mannerisms were far superior to those of the Japanese laborers of the humble class.

Nakama was the type of Japanese one might reasonably expect to find occupying a place in the councils of his countrymen. He was young, shrewd, well knit, and cultured. His handwriting was clear and regular, and his mathematical deductions were made with precision and without hesitation. A flannel shirt, flaring at the neck, disclosed additional evidences of personal neatness. Nakama's hands were small and neat, and while the palms were calloused, indicating that he, too, had worked in the fields adjacent to the fort, the nails were properly trimmed and well manicured.

This exceptional Japanese, who is typical of many others of his race who are making their homes under the very foundations of the American fortifications, was courteous but reticent, and he answered only those questions that appealed to him. It may be added, by way of explanation, that it was only after some reluctance that the man admitted that he could speak English. This is characteristic of the Japanese, and they sometimes decline to make such an acknowledgment even in court. A Los Angeles judge recently threatened a recalcitrant Japanese prisoner with severe punishment unless he would admit that he understood English. Abashed, the Japanese said, "Yes, sir, please, I speak English."

The question that arises very naturally and quite logically in the minds of the people of the Pacific coast is simply this: Why are those bright faced Japanese seeking to cultivate this desolate hill with such relentless pertinacity? It cannot be because of the abundance of the crops. Nor can it be due to the variety of the harvest. Aside from hay and an inferior quality of dried beans, little if anything in the way of productive plant life will endure on this blistered elevation. Nearer Los Angeles, and less than fifteen miles from the fort, excellent crops are being harvested by plodding Japanese, but there they have the advantages of the valley lands and there is an abundance of water for irrigation purposes. On this hill there is no water, and the only thing to commend the Japanese gardens is their proximity to Uncle Sam's last word in coast defenses.

The Japanese problem has given the people of California and the Pacific coast something to think of. It is said that there are between 75,000 and 100,000 in California, but they are debarred from New Zealand, Australia, and Canada. When California's alien land law was up for consideration by the members of the state legislature feeling ran high, and William Jennings Bryan made a special trip to Sacramento on behalf of the American government. At that time it was reported from Tokyo that the Japanese people were embittered toward Californians, and many of them openly demanded that Japan declare war on the United States.

It was for this reason, chief among others, that the people of southern California insisted that congress authorize the construction of a powerful fort at Los Angeles harbor, commonly known as San Pedro. It is admitted, moreover, that the new fortifications, when completed, will be all that could be desired, as coast defenses go, but in considering the fort as a fort it is necessary to look beyond the mere completion of the work and anticipate an attack of the enemy. It is interesting to note just what that hill would offer, in the way of a target for the enemy ships, if the government engineers had completed their labors and the sixteen inch guns and mortars were placed in commission today.

In the first place, as has been shown, the Japanese village is in direct line with the fort overlooking the harbor. If Japanese battleships hovering off Los Angeles harbor could find the range of Fort McArthur in no other way, it would be no trick at all for Japanese spies on shore to set fire to the tinder-like shacks of the Japanese village. Baled hay, piled high in village streets, would also furnish an excellent basis for a high bonfire if properly treated and soaked in oil. A battleship commander equipped with a night glass and possessed of average intelligence would hardly overlook so rare an opportunity, even though he had not been apprised of the presence of the spies.

But as a range finder for the enemy's guns this crude method pales into insignificance when it is compared with yet another and far more dangerous menace which lurks in the hills that house Fort McArthur. This is a mammoth oil reservoir recently constructed by the General Petroleum company. Its capacity is 500,000 barrels of oil, brought in by pipe lines from the Midway oil fields of Taft. This immense reservoir is sunk in the ground, and it is so very near the fort that a shell intended for the one might very easily strike the other. Situated as it is, directly in the shadow of the coast fortifications, what a useful beacon light this huge vat of oil would be were it to burst into a column of flame! Five hundred thousand barrels of oil, fired by a shell from the enemy's guns, illuminating the hills of San Pedro and exposing Fort McArthur's position to the ships of the invaders! If the shells of the enemy failed to ignite the giant lamps there would yet remain the torch of the incendiary!

Unquestionably this thought did not occur to the engineers who drew the plans for Fort McArthur, and doubtless it is likewise true that the officers of the General Petroleum company have given the matter very little serious thought, but the condition exists nevertheless, and the studious "gardeners" are in a position to take copious notes from their vantage points on the hill. The fort builders, the oil industry, and the lowly farmers divide honors on the bluffs overlooking Los Angeles harbor. Apparently all are attending strictly to their own affairs, but the people of California are wondering why the farmers are hovering so persistently in the immediate vicinity of the United States military reservation. The garden ends where the reservation begins!

It has been said that if you desire a good map of the Pacific coast you must visit Tokio. This may or may not be true, but if Tokio desired a map of Point Firmin she would experience no difficulty in obtaining one. If the "farmers" could not suply the need it it safe to say that they could pave the way for some one who could. And if we leave the "farmers" for a moment and search the coast of San Pedro we find yet another colony of Japanese. These are the fishermen, and they are distributed along the southern coast in an unbroken line from Vancouver to the west coast of Mexico. Off the coast of Santa Monica they are especially populous. Perhaps it is written that the ships of the Japanese will never invade the Pacific coast, but when this contingency arises, if it ever does, there will be found no logical excuse for the Japanese admiral who loses his way en route. The fishermen-draftsmen will take care of these little details. Such, at least, is the belief of a majority of observant residents of the Pacific coast.

As for Fort McArthur, it is said that the construction is the finest bit of engineering this coast has ever beheld. The concrete tunnels and the massive base for the huge mortars have assumed definite shape and they have won the unstinted praise of all who have seen them. Indeed, so rapidly has the work progressed of late that at least one part of the fort is being put in readiness to receive the mountings for the defense it is designed to house. But visitors are no longer welcome, and the "farmers" and the sightseers must not set foot on the reservation proper. If one invades the reservation, even with the proper permission, one must not take a camera along. If he does it is confiscated and the plates are removed for examination. After the inspection the camera is returned to the owner.

Even so, it is possible to visit the reservation surreptitiously, since there are no guards on duty, and gaze below upon the work that has been done. One quick glance will give one a comprehensive view of the interior, after which a watchman is likely to appear and warn the visitor that he is trespassing on forbidden ground. The visitor knows this quite well, unless he is blind; signs painted on a background of red convey a mute warning.

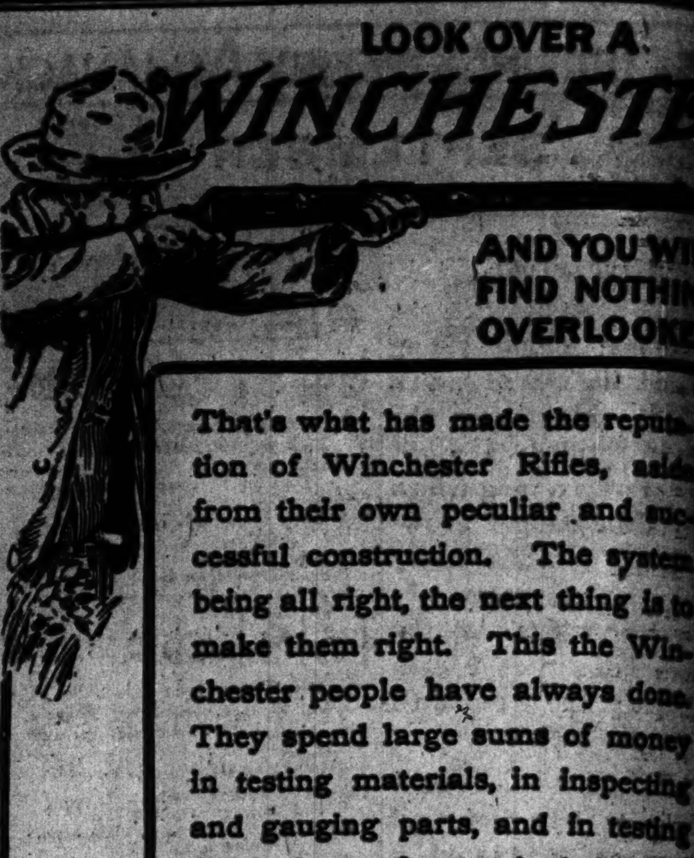
Just to what extent the Japanese "farmers" of California have been interested in the work of the United States army officers is, of course, purely problematical. Perhaps their interest was nominal. Possibly they were interested solely in their lean crops. Mayhap they paid scant heed to the plans in the making of an American fort. The fact remains, however, that the Japanese are there. And they made their appearance on or about the date that the tentative location for the fort was decided upon. They have remained ever since ground was broken for the fortifications. And they are there today.



That's what has made the reputation of Winchester Rifles, aside from their own peculiar and successful construction. The system being all right, the next thing is to make them right. This the Winchester people have always done. They spend large sums of money in testing materials, in inspecting and gauging parts, and in testing finished guns for manipulation and shooting, so when the gun reaches you—it's a perfect shooting iron. There are Winchester Single Shot Rifles, Repeating Rifles and Automatic Rifles, and you can get them in various calibers suitable

Increasing Prosperity Booms Motor Stocks

The motor truck industry is booming now. Some companies report business 300% larger than last year. $80,000,000.00 worth of motor trucks were exported from the United States in the last 22 months. The next five years will see extraordinary progress in the manufacturing of commercial motor vehicles.

Those who were fortunate enough to secure an interest in the big companies of today a few years ago, when those companies were first organized, have already reaped the reward of their foresight and good judgment. If you did not take advantage of the conditions then prevailing in the motor industry, you can now take advantage of the similar conditions prevailing in the motor-truck industry. The manufacture of commercial motor vehicles is, comparatively speaking, just beginning, for the merchants and manufacturers are beginning to learn that motor-truck transportation is far cheaper and more efficient than horse-drawn delivery.

Commercial Motor Vehicles

An ever-increasing demand now exists for commercial motor vehicles. The result of this condition is that the manufacturers of motor trucks are now running their plants night and day. Hitherto unheard-of profits are being made in the motor-truck industry. The White Motor Company's statement for 1915 shows a net profit per vehicle of $1,070. A smaller motor-truck company organized in 1914 with a capital of only $8,000 made a profit of $530,593 for the twelve months ending June 30, 1916. Another company, having a factory in Ohio, with an issued capital of only $375,000, made a profit equal to 120 per cent on the total issued capital. The Federal Motor Truck Company made a profit of 111 per cent on their capital in 1915, and the estimated profit for 1916 is 240 per cent. This company's output is only twelve trucks per day, and the original capital is said to have been only $25,000. This company paid stock dividends of 50 per cent in 1912, 100 per cent in 1913, 100 per cent in 1914, and 150 per cent in June, 1915. Suppose you have invested only $1,000 in Federal stock when the company was first organized. To-day you would be enjoying a steady income of about $6,000 per year, and the present market value of your original $1,000 would be approximately $75,000.

Boom in Motor Stocks

In August I predicted a boom in industrial stocks, particularly in motor stocks. The motor-stock boom is here now. General Motors common, that sold at $257 per share a year ago (par value $100 per share), advanced to $750 per share last week, the highest price ever paid for an industrial stock on the New York Stock Exchange. Other motor shares will undoubtedly rise just as rapidly. Now is the time to buy the low-priced motor issues, before the ever-increasing demand for profitable motor stocks forces the price beyond your reach.

Early in June I offered my clients Metropolitan Motors common at $3 per share. Those who took my advice and purchased at $3 per share have already made a profit of $2 per share, or have nearly doubled their money. Those who now buy at $5 per share I confidently expect will more than double their money between now and the end of the year. Many regret they did not buy Metropolitan Motors at $3 per share. Next December are you going to be one of those who will regret they did not buy it at $5 per share in September?

Foresight Paid

Those who had the foresight to join such successful pioneers as Ford, Chalmers, Willys, Chandler, Chevrolet, and others have made comfortable fortunes. What these men are to the passenger-automobile industry William C. Mack is to the motor-truck industry. You surely must foresee the time when for every motor truck used to-day there will be a hundred or even a thousand in use. You must realize that Mr. Mack, pioneer of the motor-truck industry and one of the founders of the famous Mack motor trucks, is the man of all men who is qualified to develop the motor-truck industry. Why don't you exercise the same judgment and courage that the early investor in Reo, Chalmers, Chandler, Chevrolet, General Motors, Willys-Overland, Ford, and other companies did a few years ago? What has been done before can undoubtedly be done again.

Strong Company and Able Men

William C. Mack, one of the founders of the famous Mack motor trucks, and a pioneer of the motor-truck industry, with eighteen years' successful experience designing and building motor trucks, has joined influential and financial business men in organizing Metropolitan Motors, Inc. The company has no debts, has a substantial cash treasury, and is now actively engaged in manufacturing its first commercial motor trucks in New York City. The $1,000,000 capital stock is all common, and every shareholder shares in the profits.

The men who are directing the policies of Metropolitan Motors are men who have proven by their past records their right to your entire confidence. They are business men who have made good. Having made a success of their own lives, they have earned the right to represent your interests in the company. They include:

William C. Mack, President.
One of the founders of Mack Motor Car Company.

George A. Baker, Director.
Late superintendent of motive power and machinery for leading railroad companies, editor of Railroad Magazine, and president of Railway Men's Educational Association.

S. Hirsh, Director.
Until recently one of the leading merchants of Richmond, Va., and now vice-president of the Lock Joint Pipe Company, New York city.

Chas. W. Paget, Secretary.
Lately associated with a leading beet-sugar company, and interested in large colonization projects in the United States and Canada.

During Mr. Mack's eighteen years' experience his observations have convinced him that there is a vast market for a well-designed, ruggedly constructed motor-delivery wagon of 1,000 pounds capacity that can be sold at a price within the reach of the small merchant, gardener, farmer, etc. Mr. Mack states that during the next ten years you will see hundreds of thousands and probably millions of this type of motor truck used in every city in the world.

Motor truck profits are so enormous—big cash and stock dividends that have been paid and are now being paid are so large—comfortable fortunes from small investments so common—that the investing public throughout the United States now demands motor truck stocks in preference to any other class of investment. Never before has the investor been given an opportunity to share in enormous manufacturing profits on such a fair basis and with such assurances of great possibilities for unheard of earnings.

Metropolitan Motors, Inc., manufacturing skill provides a production of 3,000 half-ton trucks per year. The list price includes a profit of about $100 per truck, producing profits of $300,000 yearly. The intention of the company is to increase this production to 5,000 cars per year, with profits of $5,000,000 yearly, or the equivalent of 50% on the entire capitalization.

Unusual Progress

Metropolitan Motors three months ago was not even heard of. Today it is an operating company, having a factory in the heart of New York's manufacturing district, machinery has been installed, parts of the first lot of motor trucks have been purchased and received at the company's factory, and the first lot of Metropolitan Motors trucks are waiting only for bodies. Already the truck is being used in satisfactory testing runs about the city. Mr. Mack states that he believes from the extraordinary progress already shown by Metropolitan Motors in such a short time that Metropolitan Motors will be on a dividend paying basis before long.

Metropolitan Popular-Priced Light Truck, $695

The mechanical details of the new Metropolitan Popular Priced Truck give evidence of its superior construction. Every detail of the construction is in accordance with the very best engineering practice and based upon Mack knowledge, ability, ingenuity and skill. This motor truck is the result of William C. Mack's 18 years' experience.

Backed by such a man, Metropolitan Motors, Inc., bids fair to revolutionize the motor truck industry and put motor delivery trucks within the reach of hundreds of thousands of small merchants now waiting for a popular-priced motor truck to replace their horse-drawn equipment.

Gossip of the Auto Trade

[illegible] O'Hara, the Irish singer and actor, is setting a good example to follow [illegible] by motoring from city to city where his professional engagements call him. O'Hara drives an all year Kissel and is enthusiastic regarding its performance and range of service, both as an open and closed car.

September, with shipments for the first fifteen days closely approaching the record for any previous full month in the eight years' history of the Empire Automobile company, will be the banner sales period for this successful factory. Demand for deliveries, the sales department records show, are not limited to any one section of the country, but bring a general distribution from the east to the far west. In addition to the domestic shipments over fifty more Empires will go abroad before the end of the month.

The highest tribute paid an American made motor car is the favor in which the Scripps-Booth is held by the royal families of Europe. There is hardly a royal garage that does not house one or more of these light cars, and if it had not been for the disturbance of the war with foreign shipments, the number would undoubtedly be greater. King Alfonso of Spain enjoys handling the wheel himself and is frequently seen on the streets of Madrid driving his Scripps-Booth and giving his attendants a merry chase. Prince Andre of Greece is another who drives and he is a familiar sight in Athens, as is Prince Aage of Denmark. The royal garage at Copenhagen, indeed, has a complete equipment of Scripps-Booth cars, as, in addition to Prince Aage, Queen Alexandrine and Princess Margrethe both have Scripps-Booths for their personal use.

"And lo, when the year was up the name of Abou Ben Adhem led the list." This was the remark of President C. W. Nash of the Nash Motors company when he received the list of the twelve Jeffery car dealers who led in pleasure car sales last season. "And in this case the Abou Ben Adhem is A. M. Robbins, president of the Centaur Motor company of Chicago, who wins the distinction of having sold more Jeffery pleasure cars than any other dealer in our organization." Mr. Robbins made a record that rarely has been equaled in the history of car distribution for machines of the price of the Jeffery. His selling organization led those of the following cities in the order named: Milwaukee, Boston, Philadelphia, Minneapolis, Rutland (Ill.), New York, Dayton, Des Moines, Fort Worth, Louisville, and Rockford.

"The automobile buying public of Chicago has placed the stamp of approval on our new dual power car," states George R. Veeder, manager of retail sales for the Woods Motor Vehicle company, in the Chicago territory. "We have placed three new demonstrating cars on the streets in the last two weeks and these cars have been kept busy from early in the morning until late at night, taking care of the large number of inquiries we are having on our new product."

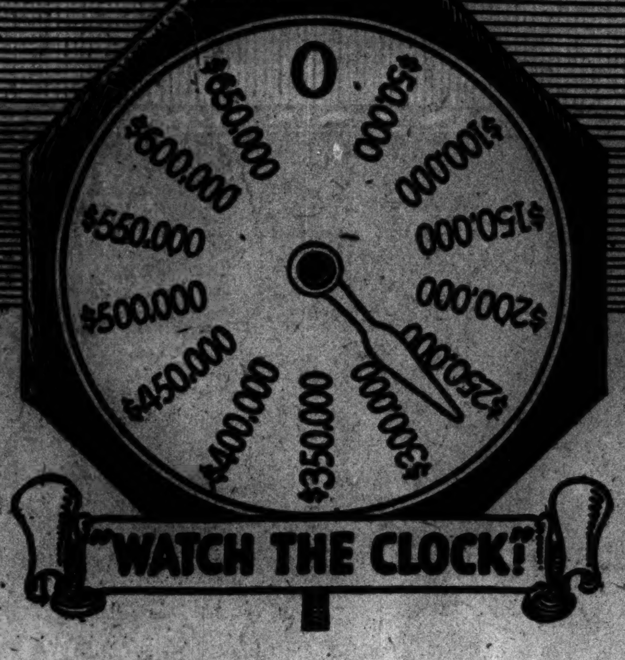
The Time Grows Short! Act Today!!



DREXEL

Buy DREXEL Stock for a few days more at par—$10 per share! Price sure to go up under our present heavy selling! READ THE FACTS—THEN ACT!

THE old clock is fast ticking away the biggest investment opportunity you ever faced. Thousands of people are watching it—following it with keen interest. Hundreds are undoubtedly waiting until the last, convinced, but—waiting—playing with fate! ! !

¶ Suppose you knew that a big, sure-enough clock was measuring off your remaining moments on old Mother Earth! Would you wait until the last hour to do the good deeds that all of us some day intend to do before passing on?

¶ If you are a newly-recruited clock-watcher—if you haven't been following our advertising campaign for the past few days, so that you only know in a vague sort of way what it's all about—then, for goodness sake, send quick and get the full facts!

* * * * * *

¶ In the meantime, we are daily taking hundreds of people out to the Drexel factory at 76th and Wallace Streets on the South Side. They go out skeptical—many of them—and come back enthused. And here's why: They find twice as much out there as we have led them to expect.

¶ They see thousands and thousands of square feet of floor space crowded with hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of machinery and materials—all paid for. They see one hundred and fifty busy workmen at work turning out the 400 Drexel cars that are now going through the factory. They see scores of motors—our own patented motors—Farmer Motors—being rushed to completion; hundreds of chassis, scores of bodies, cars on which the painters are putting the finishing touches—actual creation—actual production going on.

¶ And they see Mr. Farmer, in his shirt sleeves, directing this efficient army of workers—many of them stockholders in the company.

* * * * * *

¶ It is said of one of the big motor kings that when asked which he would rather have, in starting a new automobile manufacturing company, two million dollars or an organization, he replied, "Give me the organization and I'll quickly get the two million."

¶ We have an organization that has taken us more than a year to get together—experts chosen for their great abilities in their respective lines. These men know and respect and love Mr. Farmer. Many of them have worked along beside him and under him for years. Some were with him at Northway, when he took the big but unprofitable General Motors plant and made it clear a million dollars for its owners in sixteen months. Others of them have helped him build motors for the Chalmers, Cole and Jackson cars.

¶ And to these men—to this organization—we owe much of our success to date.

* * * * * *

¶ Our costly experimenting is over. We passed through the trial stages months and months ago, and for some time have been actually producing cars—not theoretical cars drawn by a skilled artist, but real cars of iron and steel that stand up in competition with the finest and costliest cars made—that compare in looks with any—that outdo all $900 to $1,200 cars in actual performance—cars that buyers want because the greatest and biggest value at $855 to date produced.

* * * * * *

¶ And we have the famous Farmer engine. It, of course, is the big, distinctive thing about the Drexel car. It is our biggest asset—the sensation of the motor world. Experts declare that if we owned nothing else, the Drexel Company should prove a gold mine of dividends to its stockholders, as a result of the company manufacturing and supplying these motors to the trade.

¶ Also, do not overlook the fact that we have over $250,000 worth of machinery and materials in our factory that we don't owe a single dollar on. And we have hundreds of advance orders at present impossible to fill.

* * * * * *

¶ The automobile manufacturing business is one of huge profits. But it is also one of big cash requirements. It costs real money to build cars.

¶ At present we are building at the rate of five cars per day. To be able to produce 25 cars a day will require an additional investment of over one-half million dollars in new and added machinery and materials. That is why we are today selling stock. And the money raised through this channel will immediately go into new machinery and materials needed to boost our capacity up to 25 finished cars per day.

¶ Our stock is all common stock, and carries actual ownership in the company. It is fully paid and nonassessable. We have no preferred stock and no bonded indebtedness. We don't owe a dollar in the world and have a respectable bank balance, as our financial statement shows.

¶ Our directors are well known, practical and successful Chicago business men and bankers. Our affairs will bear the closest scrutiny.

¶ We invite you to join us—to buy stock (for the present) at par, $10 per share—but subject to advance without notice. Every share of stock bought today or tomorrow will begin at once to participate in the big profits and dividends this company will make. And how much do we expect to earn? We expect to earn $1,230,000 per year just as quickly as we can begin turning out 25, instead of 5, cars a day. And why do we say this?—because our profit is $164 per car. And are these expected earnings unreasonably large? They are not, for scores of other producing companies have done even very much better with not half as much to show at the start as we possess today.

¶ Tomorrow begins the second week of our campaign. In four days we have issued approximately $250,000 worth of stock to nearly 2,000 new stock-holders—added boosters. It is but a matter of hours now until our entire $650,000 issue is sold. In a day or so the big hand of the clock will be half way round its journey. Then people will begin to realize that their opportunity is passing, and there will be a grand final rush to get in.

¶ Don't wait! Remember that opportunities like this don't present themselves every day. Remember that Chicago is destined to become a great center for the manufacture of automobiles, and that the Drexel is Chicago's first and only producing automobile factory—a real, going, successful automobile manufacturing business. Remember, you are not asked to accept anything "on faith," but are urged to go out to the factory and see all for yourself—and then, and then only, you are asked to join us and invest in this stock. Our factory is open daily and all are welcome. Take Halsted street car to plant at 76th and Wallace Street. Or we will be glad to arrange to take you and your family out in one of our fleet of automobiles.

¶ But act! And act quickly! If short of ready cash, you may subscribe for 10 or more shares and pay for same at the rate of 25% of amount of subscription with your order and balance payable in three or four equal monthly installments, drawing 6% interest. No less than 10 shares issued to any single purchaser.

"Why, I don't know."
"Messages from the departed spirits."

"How tall are you?"
"I'm six feet tall."
"How tall is your brother?"
"He's three feet tall."
"He's just half as tall as you, then?"
"Yes, he's only my half brother."

"We had a thief in our family."
"Is that so?"
"Yes, he was born on a foggy night."
"Well, what's that got to do with it?"
"Everything was mist.

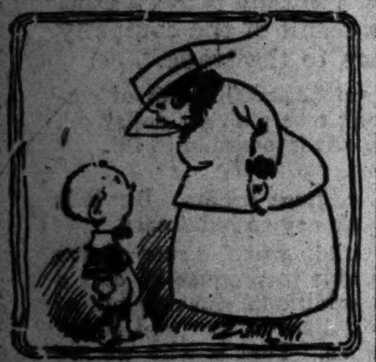
McVICKER'S.

Oliver Drisco—Well, well, this is the life. I'd much rather be doing this kind of stuff than teaching a bunch of kids at Sunday school. But that's my regular profession—Sunday school teaching. Some funny little incidents occur at a Sunday school. One Sunday morning a small boy, a child about four, came up to me and said: "Teacher, we've got a new baby at our house."

Not recognizing the child, I asked him: "Who are you?"

"O I'm the old one," was his reply.

I love children. That's the reason I'm going to be married. You didn't know that before, did you? Well, it's a fact. I have given the matter serious consideration. I've been to four fortune tellers, two clairvoyants, looked through six sign books, dreamed on a lock of his hair, and I've been to three of these astrologers, and I've also been to a meejum, and they all say go ahead. You know I ain't one of these women who marry reckless.



As I was saying before, I used to be a Sunday school teacher. Now one would think that a Sunday school teacher is an old maid, but I'm not. I'm a widow with two children. Although I've been married twice, I'm about to go into it again. So this morning, while I was sitting at the breakfast table with my two children I told them I had something important to tell them. "What is it?" asked Willie. "Well, it is this. On Friday evening I shall marry Mr. Black." Well, there was a solemn pause for a moment and then little Willie asked earnestly: "Mother, when are you going to tell Mr. Black?"

Exhaust Echoes
By J. C. Burton

For the first eight months of 1916, ended Aug. 31, sales of Studebaker cars exceeded the record for the entire year of 1915, according to figures just announced by L. J. Ollier, vice president and director of sales of the Studebaker corporation. In number of cars, 48,750 Studebakers were sold from Jan. 1 to Aug. 31 of this year, as compared with 47,040 for the whole of last year, a gain of 1,710.

G. W. Stratton, general manager of the King Motor company, 2429 South Michigan avenue, has issued a most interesting announcement of a new town car to be built in local King shops to supply the Chicago demand. "These new cars," says Mr. Stratton, "will be the talk of the row as soon as the first one appears on the street." The design is exceptional and unusual, and the cars will be finished in any color combination desired by purchasers. Mr. Stratton also announces that winter tops for King Eights will also be manufactured in Chicago, following the new design recently perfected by one of the best known car body designers in the country.

In line with its established program of producing exceptionally high class eight cars with distinctive and aristocratic lines, the Cole Motor Car company of Indianapolis has just acquired the services of B. M. Diver, expert body designer and engineer. Wherever automobile bodies of splendid design are built Diver is well known. A thorough engineering knowledge and a remarkable artistic sense have caused him to rise high in the ranks of his fellows. His special work is in connection with the present Cole-Springfield bodies, which in spite of their brief career have already gained nation wide popularity. He will also devote his personal attention to forthcoming bodies which the Cole company is contemplating as part of its regular production.

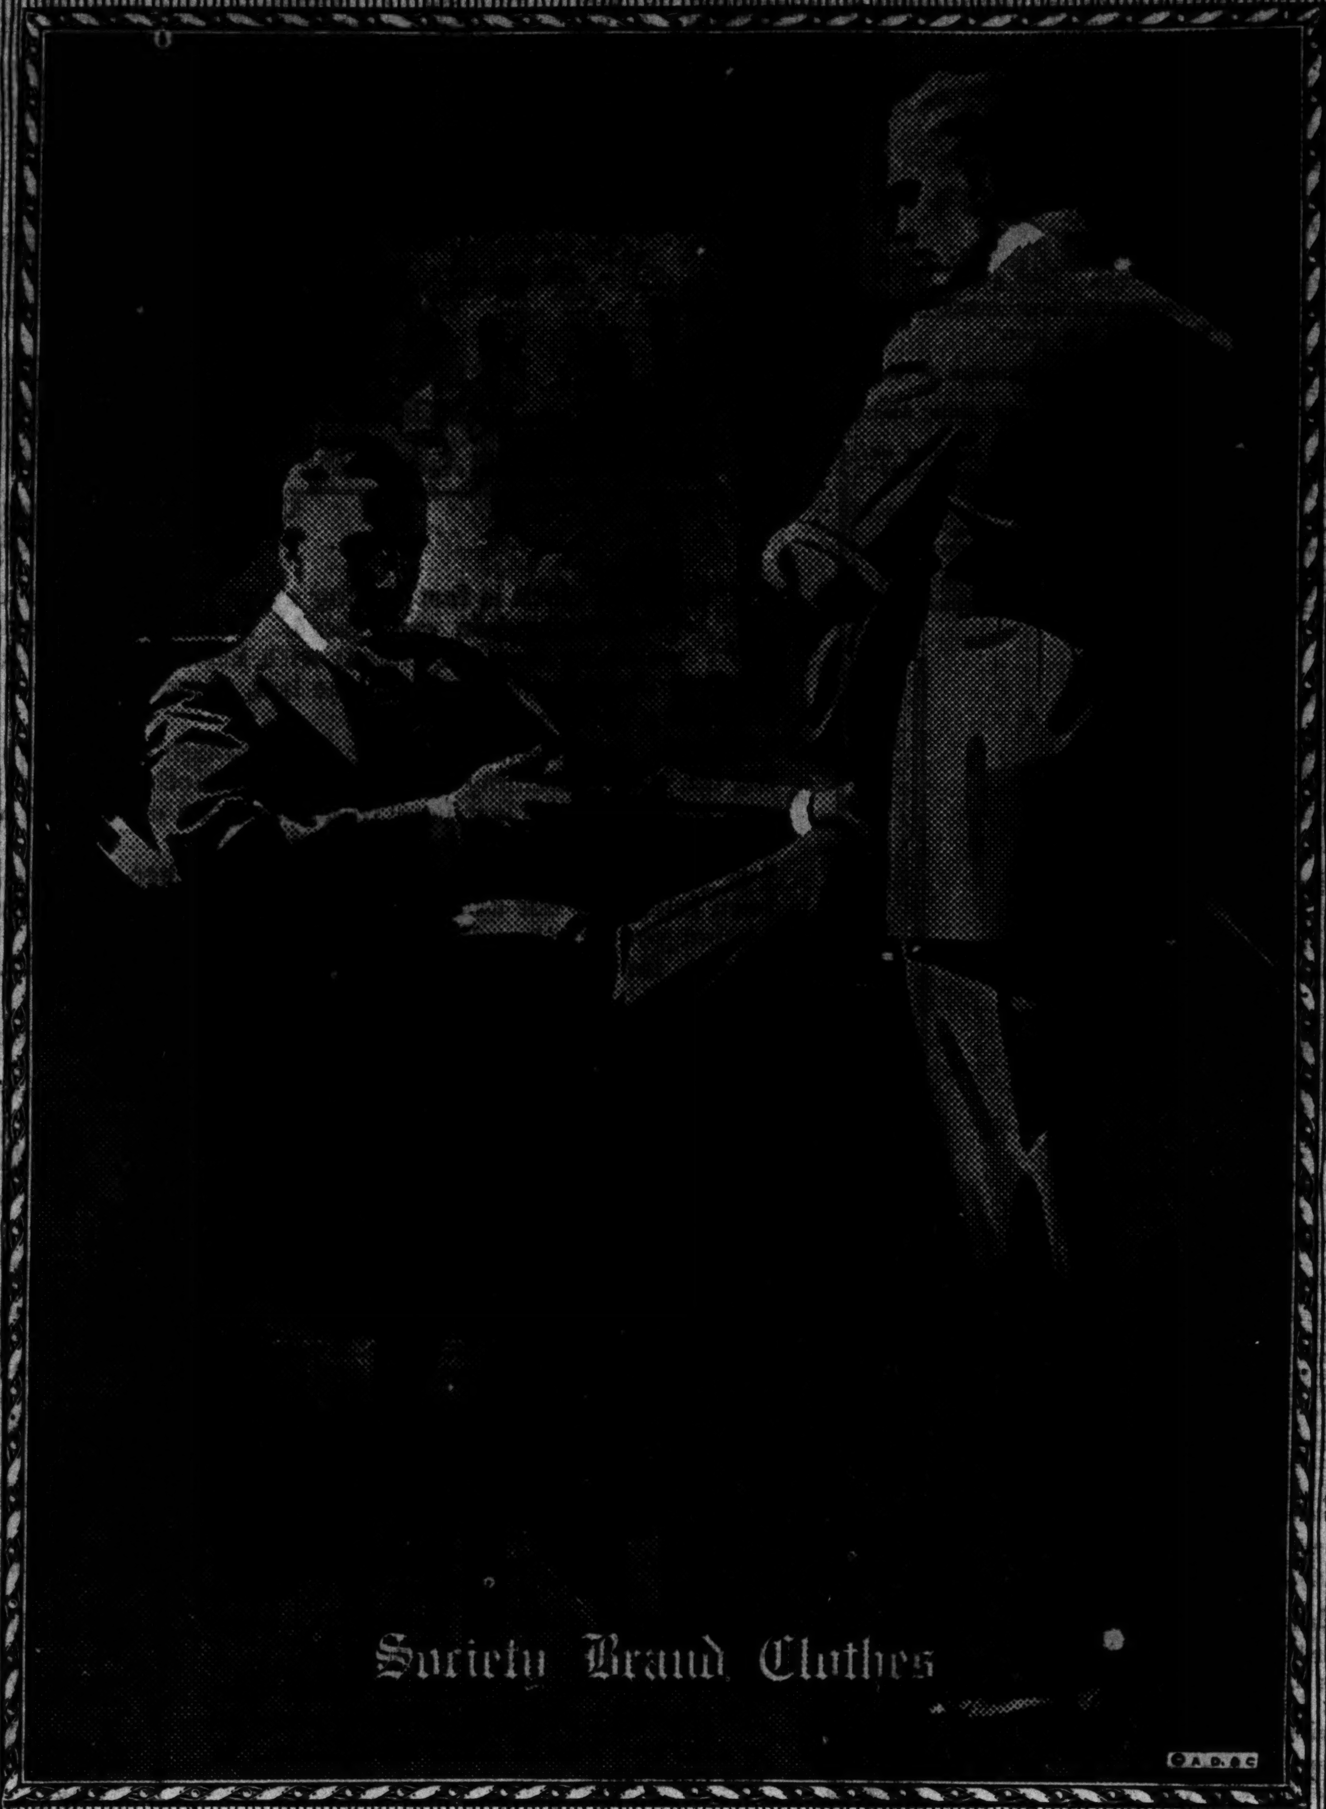
Not only with the boys down in Mexico have Packard trucks stood up under the severe test of military service, but ten silent, chainless Packards, volunteered by the Packard Motor Car company last April, have won many friends for themselves by the service they have been giving the citizen soldiers at the military training camp at Plattsburg, N. Y., this summer. The trucks, already having served four enlistments, this week enter upon their final period of service. In the permanent camp at Plattsburg the trucks have been kept busy on short hauls, mostly in transporting camp supplies. One of them has been used to carry the United States mail. The average mileage for each truck has been about 400 miles a month. No repairs other than the fixing of a grease cup or a coil have been necessary. Mileage per gallon of gasoline has ranged from four to nine miles, varying with road and haulage conditions, according to records kept by Capt. [illegible].



Society Brand Clothes

FOR YOUNG MEN and Men Who Stay Young

The stylish cut of Society Brand Clothes, their pleasing lines and refined appearance, has time and again been endorsed, by the best authorities, as the leading ready-to-wear clothes.

But perfect clothes cannot come from stylish cut alone. They must be tailored and finished in keeping. We have developed in our shops the most expert workmen. We search the world's markets for the most desirable fabrics. We have equipped our shops with the most highly improved processes. We spare no effort—no expense—to produce perfect clothes.

And yet the cost, $20 to $40, is no more than you pay for garments that lack the distinctive features of Society Brand. They have at last supplanted the finer tailor-made clothes.

If you seek that extra quality of fabric, ask for "Double Service" Clothes, sold at $30 and up.

DO YOU KNOW
That a Hogenson Model BUNGALOW

Can be paid for in $35 to $50 monthly payments, the same as you are paying your monthly rent, and only a small cash payment down?

A Bungalow such as we build in a suburban residence neighborhood has many advantages over the flat, especially for the children, who, it can plainly be seen, are strong and robust.

Our bungalows are all roomy, with large porches, have fine plastered and dry basements and big attics. The lot is sufficiently large to leave a 30 ft. space in front and enough for a garden.

On Latrobe-av., in our Austin Home Addition, between Thomas and Division-sts., we have completed several 5 and 6 room bricks, and nearly completed a number of 5 to 8 room homes, finished in the new waterproof stucco.

On Laramie-av. we also have several 5 room brick, stucco, and frame bungalows.

Our homes range in price from $4,000 to $6,500, all finished in hardwoods and artistically decorated.

If you have been thinking of buying a home, an inspection of our bungalow section in Austin will be interesting to you.

Let us send you a booklet and furnish you more particulars.

WE CHALLENGE COMPARISON

MIDLOTHIAN GARDENS
Is just what you are looking for. It meets all the needs of one who wants a home in the country, where he can continue his occupation in the city and have enough land to produce fruits, flowers, vegetables, eggs and poultry—a productive home.

LOCATION.
On the Rock Island R. R., 18 miles S. W. of Chicago, in a section that is a town in the making and within 5 min. walk to the station. An ideal spot.

TRANSPORTATION.
Numerous fast trains to and from the city, 40 min. ride, just enough time to read your paper. Nowhere can this service be excelled. Make the comparison yourself and be convinced.

SOIL.
A rich sandy loam, managed for three years to secure high fertility and declared by experts to be the best in Cook County. Compare it with any other soil and be convinced of its quality.

DRAINAGE
Is essential in raising children, chickens, or vegetables. Our land is perfectly drained by an underground tile system. Investigate this for yourself and compare it with the drainage of any other locality.

FUTURE VALUES.
This community is fast building up and land is increasing in value.

Shade trees have been set out, streets graded and sidewalks made. A park of 5 acres with a club house has been set aside for the use of the community. A co-operative store is open. You will have water and electricity.
The plots are

100x300 FT.

Equal in size to 8 ordinary city lots. Come out today and compare the values you will get. See the houses that are being built and note the activity in this locality.
You owe it to yourself to investigate thoroughly before you buy. The prices and terms are reasonable.
The fare on a monthly ticket is 10 cents.

A. O. Rule & Co., Agents
40 N. Dearborn. Cent. 8938.

REAL ESTATE—FARM LANDS.

Michigan.

Get Into Step

THE TROUBLE with men who don't succeed is mostly that they do not get into step with some big movement. They don't realize they are living in a progressive period and not sharing in its progress. One of the biggest movements right now in this country is the occupation and development of the remaining unimproved lands.

THE DIFFERENCE between men who are successes and those who are failures is principally mental habit. Men who think catch the spirit of the times and take advantage of circumstances. They have faith in the continuance of progress in manufacturing, commerce, and agriculture. When human endeavor hesitates temporarily in one direction it seeks another outlet. Very shortly the great tide of investment will turn from "war stocks" to farm lands because agriculture is uppermost in public interest and we are preparing ourselves as a nation to plow more furrows to help feed the ever increasing millions.

YOU WHO HAVE BEEN hesitating, can't you see that now is your time to acquire farm land? Don't put it off until next year, but come on one of our excursions during October. It will be just a little bit harder to buy next year, as it is each succeeding year.

WHY MICHIGAN? Because the Swigart Tract is one of the few not fully developed but rapidly progressing spots left in our country. It is located here at the consuming center of population, near the world markets of Chicago, Milwaukee, Grand Rapids, and Detroit, tapped by the main arteries of rail and water transportation and has the climate, soil, rainfall, water supply, and other conditions that produce every crop known to the temperate zone. Also ambitious, energetic, healthy men and women and happy, well fed children. What more is there in life?

SEVERAL THOUSAND STRONG, we, the owners in the Swigart tract, are a part of the nation-wide land movement. We are doing our part in Michigan, backing our district in Manistee, Mason, Lake, and Wexford counties with our united strength. We are in the best part of Michigan, with our central fruit belt location. We are in the most rapidly developing part of the state and the part that, far more than any other, is calling to itself substantial farmers from Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, and Ohio. Ours is a general farming country, with the addition of the most favorable conditions for fruit.

AND THE SWIGART ORGANIZATION is doing its full share—living up to its promise and more: the promise to stay with the settlers and aid them in every way possible. Our prices are low, ranging from $10 to $25 per acre and a large selection at $18 to $20, and the contract is liberal, giving seven years' time by monthly or yearly payments. Also insurance to the purchaser after part is paid and privilege to exchange. Our aim is to place a settler on every 40, 80, 120, and 160 acre piece and our policy is to satisfy as well as to sell him land. This aim and policy has placed the stamp of success and permanency on the work of this colonizing project.

THOROUGH-GOING FARMERS, and all who want to know the reasons why you will do well to join the big Swigart tract colony, send at once for literature illustrated with many photographic reproductions of the lands and containing descriptions of all the crops, resources, and advantages of this district, also a large map. Call if convenient and see samples of crops of clover, rye, wheat, oats, corn, vetch, millet, beans, peas, and vegetables.

MY TWO NEXT EXCURSIONS will leave my Chicago offices at 11:20 a. m. Tuesdays, Oct. 3 and 17, returning at 7:20 a. m. the following Fridays. Round trip fare from Chicago to Wellston, my Michigan headquarters, $12.50, including railroad fare, meals, and lodging. If you purchase land your railroad fare will be rebated. Automobiles and guides free. Offices remain open Monday evenings and Saturday afternoons.

Do You Know

That few states offer better opportunities for diversified farming, dairying, stock raising, etc., than Nebraska? Contrary to what some of the people in the Eastern States seem to think, this state is not all ranch land, table land, nor irrigated land, but a splendid combination of the three.

If you are interested in diversified farming, dairying or stock raising write to me TODAY, for reliable information which will be sent to you free.

A NEW AMERICAN INDUSTRY

Which has proved capable of earning tremendous profits is now being incorporated as a new department of an established business already earning more than sufficient to warrant substantial dividends on all stock issued. We have still open for subscription at par [$100.00 shares] $50,000.00 of the capital stock, which is to be used for the extensive expansion of our new industry.

We know of no investment in the market today which gives legitimate promise of such large and ever increasing dividends from year to year. This proposition will appeal to those who wish to invest in securities, which will not be affected by the termination of the European war.

If you have $500.00 to $10,000 to invest in a conservative enterprise, which has every indication of becoming one of America's greatest commercial industries, write at once for full details. Address O L 59, Tribune.

THE SPOTLIGHT IS ON THEM—In the central picture the former Greek premier and the power behind the throne in Greece, Eleutherios Venizelos, is shown in amused conversation with Constantine I., king of the Hellenes. Queen Sophia, sister of the kaiser, and the dominant factor in keeping Greece from entering the war on the side of the allies, is pictured on the left. Prince George, duke of Sparta, heir to the Hellenic throne, has favored the allies, a fact that almost brought about a break between parents and son. Venizelos has, since the war began, been the champion of the allies' cause, and as such he is the most powerful man in Greece. (Photographs by the American Press Association and by John T. McCutcheon.)

ACQUIRING AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP—Some of the thousands of non-English speaking immigrants of a large industrial organization being taught to read and write English. On Sept. 1 the United States Bureau of Education began its nation-wide campaign to make better citizens. The slogan of the campaign is "America First." The plan is to induce 3,000,000 immigrants who speak no English to attend night schools. The commissioner of education has designated men dealing with every branch of the immigrant question to serve on a committee of 100 to further the purpose of the campaign. Many factories, like the one shown above, have taken it upon themselves to teach their immigrant workmen the essentials of United States citizenship.

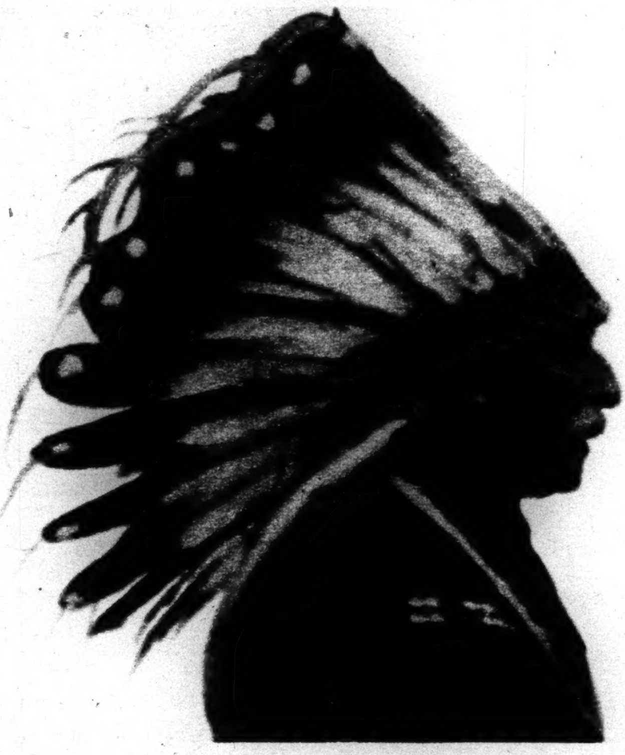
PRINCESS AUGUST WILHELM AND HER SON—She is the wife of the fourth son of the kaiser. She was Princess Alexandra Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glucksburg. James O'Donnell Bennett, Tribune war correspondent, who sent this picture from Berlin, writes: "Princess August Wilhelm is the most popular woman in Germany, more popular than the crown princess, because the latter is so busy she does not get a chance to attend public gatherings. Princess August Wilhelm is often seen at dedications and ceremonials. She is chic and gracious, and both notables and people make much of her."



NOW TEENCHAKA EEYAKE OONKA—The Duke of Connaught, retiring governor general of Canada, on July 15 was made a chief of the Stony tribe of Indians at Banff, Alberta. His title, when translated, means Great Mountain Chief. Chief George McLean of the tribe placed a chief's headdress on the duke's head and presented him with a medal and a complete Indian costume.

WOUNDED AT THE FRONT—While Lady Sybil Grey, elder daughter of Earl Grey, was watching hand grenade practice on the Russian front, a piece of grenade flew through the window of the armored shelter in which she was standing and lodged in her left cheek. Conspicuous nose pores How to reduce them

Complexions otherwise flawless are often ruined by conspicuous nose pores.

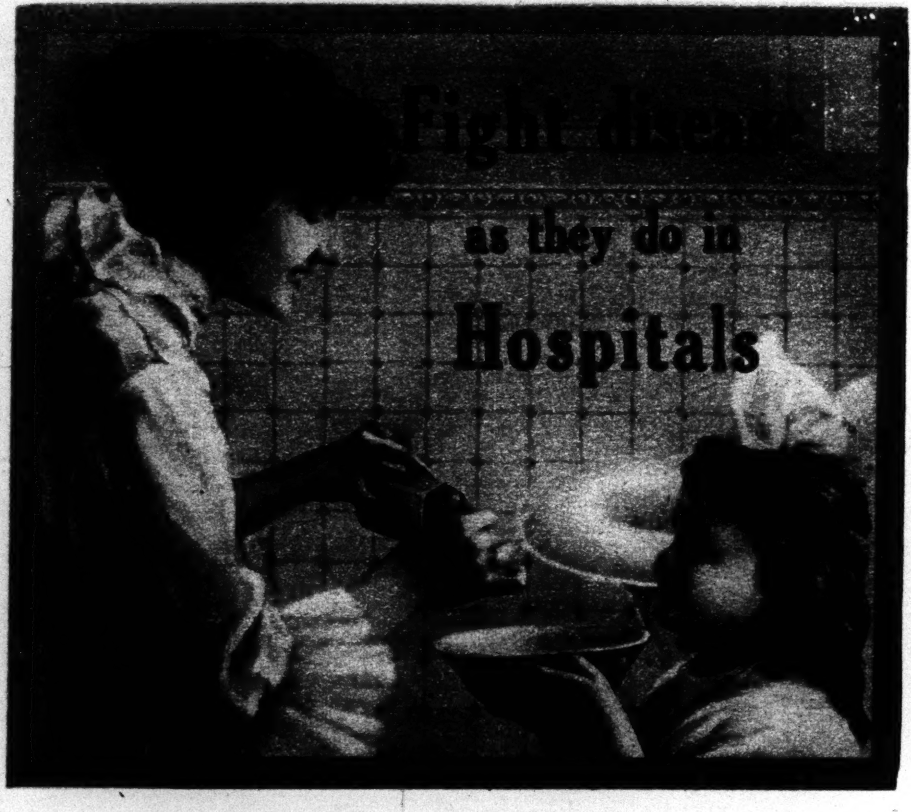
In such cases the small muscular fibres of the nose have become weakened and do not keep the pores closed as they should be. Instead these pores collect dirt, clog up and become enlarged.

To reduce these enlarged pores: Wring a cloth from very hot water, lather it with Woodbury's Facial Soap, then hold it to your face. When the heat has expanded the pores, rub in very gently a fresh lather of Woodbury's. Repeat this hot water and lather application several times, stopping at once if your nose feels sensitive. Then finish by rubbing the nose for a few minutes with a lump of ice.

Woodbury's Facial Soap cleanses the pores. This treatment with it strengthens the muscular fibres so they can contract properly. But do not expect to change in a week a condition resulting from years of neglect. Use this treatment persistently. It will gradually reduce the enlarged pores until they are inconspicuous.

Do this today! A 25c cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap is sufficient for a month or six weeks of this treatment. Go to your druggist or toilet counter today and get a cake. Begin at once to get the benefits of this treatment for your skin.

Woodbury's Facial Soap is for sale by every dealer and druggist in Chicago, and, in fact, by dealers everywhere throughout the United States and Canada. Made by The Andrew Jergens Co., New York and Cincinnati.



Always used in water. Many times stronger than carbolic acid, but safe to use.

New England women have been using the disinfectant Sylpho-Nathol (formerly Sulpho-Napthol) for thirty years. They know that it gives sure, safe results and is economical.

Used as antiseptic—for cuts, wounds, bruises, bites and stings. As a gargle—for sore throat. As a douche.

As a disinfectant—for kitchen sinks, garbage pail, closet, cellar, waste pipes. In the sick-room and for general cleaning.

"Now that IS a bargain"

A Bargain

"an advantageous purchase"

—The Century Dictionary

WE are offering at the present time the greatest bargain we have ever offered, and when we use the word "BARGAIN" we mean "an advantageous purchase."

During the six months between January 1st and July 1st, we sold just over 70,000 sets of The Encyclopaedia Britannica, "Handy Volume" issue, and the money value amounted to just over $5,000,000. The publishers had sold to the general public before we made our offer just over 75,000 sets, and the money value amounted to $13,500,000. Thus we sold practically the same number of sets, and saved the public $8,000,000

Yet the saving of this vast amount to our customers would not necessarily mean "a bargain," because if the Britannica was not useful to them it would not be "an advantageous purchase," even if we did make a reduction of about 60 per cent in the price.

The total sales of the new Encyclopaedia Britannica—that is, the publishers' sale and our sale—are just 147,384 sets of this useful work purchased within a short time, or a total of 4,274,136 volumes.

NOW WHY have the people of the U. S. made this enormous purchase of the new Encyclopaedia Britannica?

It seems to us that it is because the Encyclopaedia Britannica is THE MOST USEFUL work that has ever been published, and the prices and terms on which we offer it make it a very great "BARGAIN."

Below you will find a map of the U. S. showing the population and number of sets of The Encyclopaedia Britannica sold in each State. Look and see how many sets have been sold in your State, some of which must be in your own vicinity. We could send you letters of recommendation from practically every prominent man in the U. S., but instead of doing that, if you will send us the coupon at the end of this advertisement we will give you a LIST OF THE OWNERS NEAR YOU. You can then ask some of the actual buyers and users of the new Encyclopaedia Britannica whether they think you would find the work useful.

The Sale, State by State, of the

A TOTAL SALE OF 147,384 SETS, OR 4,274,136 VOLUMES OF THE ENCYCLOPAEDIA BRITANNICA

If you add together the number of volumes of all other encyclopaedias sold in all other countries and in all the different languages of the globe in the same time, the total will not be one quarter of the above number of Encyclopaedia Britannicas sold.

Now why is this?

The reason is that for 148 years—since its first appearance—The Encyclopaedia Britannica has been written and published not as a money making venture for the profit that was in it, but as an educational work, as a means of spreading useful knowledge. The Editors of the Britannica alone of all books published, were not under the control of the business office. The only question the Editors had to ask themselves was, how and where can we get the best article or the best illustration or the best map? Who is the most qualified man to write on this or that subject? The financial consideration was never thought of.

That is the reason why the Encyclopaedia Britannica is the best work ever published, and that is the reason why more copies of it have been sold in the United States alone than of all other encyclopaedias in all languages the world over, and that is the reason why it is so useful.

The progressive and enterprising man and woman in every

"Did These 147,384 People Make a Mistake in Buying, or Are You Making a Mistake in Not Buying the New Encyclopaedia Britannica?"

THE Editor would be most pleased to answer any question that you might ask regarding the contents of the Encyclopaedia Britannica and how it would be useful to you.

A short time since a gentleman wrote asking if one could learn to PLAY CHESS from the Encyclopaedia Britannica—a manufacturer of suit-cases asked what articles he ought to read to know all about LEATHER, the raw material of his business. A lady wrote asking for the articles she ought to read to make a study of SHAKESPEAREAN LITERATURE. A mother wrote, saying: "Rainy days are troublesome to me because I don't know how to keep my CHILDREN BUSY INDOORS. Will the Encyclopaedia help me?" A lady wrote asking what articles to study regarding HOUSE DECORATIONS. A farmer wrote asking if the book contained information on SILOS. A man wanted to know if birds did harm or good on A FARM. Another man, whether he could learn from the Britannica anything in regard to INSURING HIS LIFE. Another wrote that he was a COTTON GOODS buyer and wanted to know what articles he ought to read to help him in his business.

Women and the Presidency

By Carrie Chapman Catt

President of the National Woman Suffrage Association

WOMEN may prove a deciding factor in the coming presidential election. This is a fact admitted by all who have familiarized themselves with the situation. Not only do women have a share in the determination of 91 electoral votes, but they are a virile force to be reckoned with in any campaign into which they throw themselves with vigor and enthusiasm.

Republican women in 1888 organized a Republican Women's Auxiliary with Mrs. J. Ellen Foster as chairman. The women in this department joined in the campaign speaking all over the country, Mrs. Foster herself being the chief woman orator. From that time on the Republican Women's Auxiliary has been more or less a permanent factor in presidential campaigns.

The Democratic women organized locally about the same time in New York, Chicago and other cities, but did not have a national auxiliary woman's committee until 1912, at which time Mrs. J. Borden Harriman took the chairmanship.

The main object of these committees heretofore has been to make appeals to the women voters in the West and to secure as many as possible of them in support of their respective parties, but since 1912 five states have granted full suffrage to their women and Illinois has granted the right to vote for presidential electors. It is good policy, therefore, for the great political parties to consider the woman's vote more seriously than has been the case heretofore, and both great parties have already made their plans to catch the woman's vote, if it is to be caught, by means of well organized women's committees and special appeals made by women to women.

An interesting factor in the campaign is the fact that every candidate for president on big or little party tickets is a suffragist and every political platform has a suffrage plank conspicuously written in it.

THE other day a man in an indignant letter to a New York newspaper announced that he should not vote for a certain candidate because he had come out for woman suffrage. That means that the poor fellow has no candidate for whom he can vote at all, since all of them have come out for woman suffrage.

The National American Woman Suffrage organization in 1875 caused a federal suffrage amendment to be introduced into Congress, and has supported that amendment ardently ever since but with the realization that not until there was a larger sentiment for the enfranchisement of women could the amendment be passed by Congress and ratified by three fourths of the states.

The addition of six new suffrage states in the past four years, the near suffrage victories in other states which were not won, has given the amendment in Congress an importance it never had before. Women throughout the country are turning to that federal amendment for relief from their political disabilities as never before. There are two chief reasons.

First, the women of the United States have seen the suffrage extended to the women of foreign lands one by one until now women vote in a large number of European and Asiatic countries, to say nothing of the great Commonwealths of Australia and New Zealand, which long ago gave the full suffrage to their women. Across our northern border women have some form of suffrage throughout the whole of Canada, while in the three great provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta women have universal suffrage on the same terms as men. As this territory is nearly equal to all of the territory of the United States east of the Mississippi River, the gain is most significant.

All these extensions of suffrage to women have been made by acts of Parliament and not by the submission of the question to the rank and file of voters. Consequently, as American women have seen the ballot given to their sisters all over the world—in Canada, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, Finland, Norway, Denmark, Great Britain, Ireland, Sweden, Iceland—they have felt that the Republic of the United States is not giving them a square deal when it demands that the majority of the voters in a State must ratify a woman suffrage amendment before their women can vote.

Second, when the question of woman suffrage has been submitted to the voters of States, suffragists have discovered that honest elections are rarely secured.

As the Honorable Champ Clark said the other day in Washington, "There are good and intelligent people opposed to woman suffrage, but all the ignorant, illiterate and evil forces are solidly opposed." It is difficult to convince an illiterate man that women are intelligent enough to vote. It is difficult to convince the subnormal, the criminally inclined, that the virtues of women are assets worth having in a government. For these reasons women are turning to Congress with more and more determination to secure their enfranchisement through Congress and the legislatures upon the grounds that it is more self-respecting to solicit the vote from men of the standing found in these bodies, rather than to appeal to the men of every class and kind found upon the street.

The Federal Amendment, therefore, enters into the political campaign with an impetus it never had before. All the presidential candidates of the minor parties have come out for the Federal Amendment. The Progressive Party endorsed it in their platform. The two dominant parties in their suffrage planks recommended that the question should be settled by the States, but neither declared against the Federal method. Mr. Charles E. Hughes, the Republican candidate, has openly declared for the Federal Amendment. Mr. Wilson, at this time, does not yet endorse it, but many Democrats in Congress have not only spoken and voted for it, but are earnest advocates of it.

That many women who have the vote for president will not vote for a party or candidate which does not espouse the federal amendment is well known. How this fact will affect the final results remains to be seen. The one thing of importance is that the suffrage army grows bigger and stronger and more determined every year. The planks in the platforms indicate that final victory lies just ahead.

AND what are women going to do with the vote when they get it? Doubtless the first effect will be upon the parties with which women affiliate. Within these parties they will determine the kind of candidates for office for which self-respecting, high-thinking women can afford to vote. Personally, I hope that the first great national result and the first great thing that women will stand for will be an elimination of corruption of every kind from American politics.

When politicians of the old school are asked how and when bribery and graft were introduced into American politics, they invariably say that they came from Great Britain. Great Britain has cleaned out her augean stable and the women did it. In 1884 a Corrupt Practices Act was passed by the British Parliament. It came as a result of spontaneous protest from the people of Great Britain against the most flagrant violation of decency in the elections of that country.

The peculiar custom which had opened the way to corruption was the use of paid canvassers. The Corrupt Practices Act, therefore, forbade the use of paid canvassers. The political parties recognized that the practice must stop, but they were at their wit's end to know how to do their political work. The Tories were the first to discover a method. Since that work began unpaid work has been relegated to women, and so the women were asked to do the canvassing. The Primrose League was organized for them, and Duchesses and Ladies went out to do the work which the paid corruptors had done.

The Liberals looked on with contempt and spoke of gentle ladies as "she-hyenas," but suddenly the Liberals saw a great light. "If the Tories can get the women to canvass for them, why can we not do so?" And forthwith the Woman's Liberal League was organized. When the women stepped into British politics through the front door, corruption departed through the back door.

Our system is very different from that of Great Britain. Our corruption is not committed by paid canvassers, but when American women secure their vote corruption must depart. I personally believe that the first great contribution made by voting women will be to restore the sanctity of the ballot, to elevate our political campaigns from the mud and mire of corrupt money and conspiracy to a plane of open reason and persuasion. No other policy is consistent in a republic. If we must have leaders, let them be seated upon a public throne and made responsible to the people for their acts. An invisible government is a menace to a free people, and against this situation the women of America will set their hand and seal. The best men of our country will lead the fight and women will support it. A new day for Democracy is about to be ushered in.

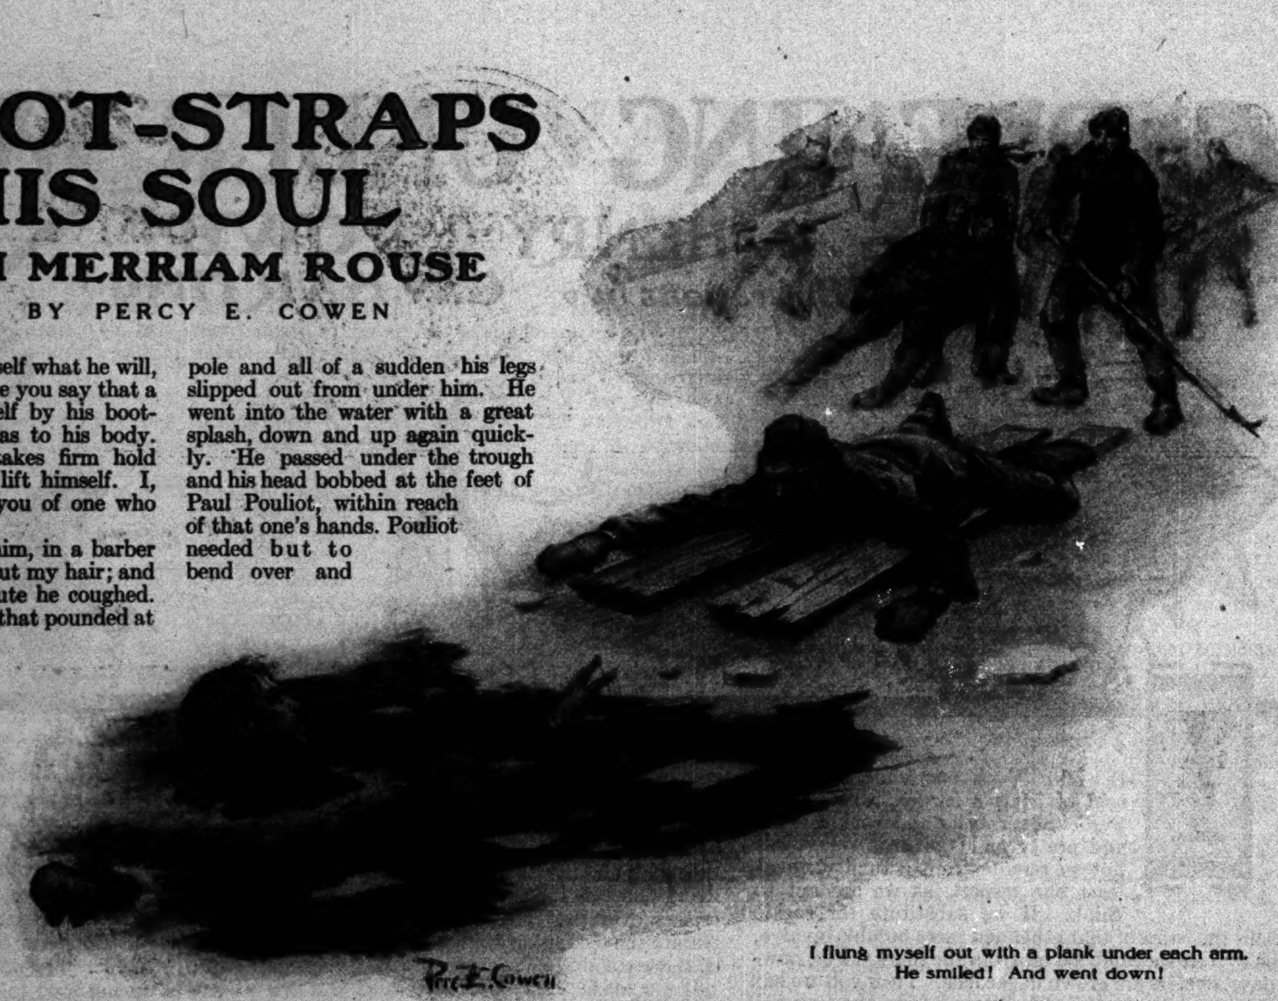
THE BOOT-STRAPS OF HIS SOUL

By WILLIAM MERRIAM ROUSE

ILLUSTRATED BY PERCY E. COWEN



I flung myself out with a plank under each arm. He smiled! And went down!

A MAN can do with himself what he will, m'sieu. In your tongue you say that a man cannot lift himself by his boot-straps, which is true as to his body. Yet, certainly, if he takes firm hold upon his soul, he can lift himself. I, Jean Dugal, will tell you of one who lifted himself thus.

It was in Quebec that I first saw him, in a barber shop of the Rue de la Fabrique. He cut my hair; and as often as two or three times a minute he coughed. It was a little, ugly cough, deep down, that pounded at him from within. He kept his lips closed and swallowed the cough so well that one a dozen feet away could not have heard. This barber was a small man, with a thin neck and red color high up on his cheeks.

"You have a bad cough," I said, after a time. He started so that his shears slipped, and then bent close to my ear.

"M'sieu, I beg of you!" he whispered. "My employer works but two chairs away, and if once he understands that I have an affliction of the lungs, I shall be discharged!"

"You are a fool," I told him, earnestly but in a low voice. "Outside is the clean air of Canada, that would cure you; yet you shut yourself up in a hot, little room to die!"

"It is necessary that one should eat every day!"

"But yes!" I understood what he meant. "Come out to Beauport and I will give you work with my men, cutting ice upon the Saint-Laurent."

"It must be cold on the river," he answered, slowly. "And the wind."

BY that time he had finished with me and I was glad to go away, for his was the face of a man sorely stricken. Half an hour later I was passing the shop again, on my way to the railroad station, when from within came a sudden uproar. Out popped the little barber, struggling into his overcoat.

"M'sieu!" he cried, as he fell into step beside me. "I saw you just now through the window and left a customer half shaved! You are the first man who has spoken kindly to me in a long time, and I am going to take that job on the river!"

Eh bien! The next morning he came to the Brasserie Beauport, whence my teams started out, and I learned that his name was Paul Pouliot. I had little faith that this barber would last half a day, m'sieu, for the wind upon the Saint-Laurent will sometimes stagger a strong man, and if there is a little frozen mist in the air, a hundred needles prick the face.

Pouliot and I were the last to go out on the river that morning, and as we started, the first blast of a gale struck us with the slap of a mighty hand. He curled up like a worm that has been stepped on, and whimpered aloud. I stopped. For perhaps a minute we stood there staring at each other, and I was almost ashamed to look upon what was revealed in his eyes. His soul was uncovered. Weak, sickly, it fought to gather strength to itself and make the body go on. Each moment I expected to see him turn and run back to the shore.

Suddenly he put his head down. His frame stiffened and he breasted the gale.

"What-did-you-stop-for?" he panted. "I don't need help!"

I began to have some admiration for this little barber of Quebec and I gave him the task of keeping count of the ice cakes taken ashore. Even then I had to watch him, for he was half dead with the cold, and once it was necessary to make an errand so that he could go ashore and get warm. Yet the day might have gone well with Paul Pouliot, if it had not been for one of those accidents, seemingly inspired by the devil, which come to us often on the river.

It was toward the middle of the afternoon and the barber was standing on the edge of the open water, where we had cut away the ice, counting the number of cakes with which a sleigh was loaded. On the opposite side of the wooden trough up which these cakes were pushed, was a stupid fellow called Pierre Lachance. Lachance pushed a little too hard on the end of his pole and all of a sudden his legs slipped out from under him. He went into the water with a great splash, down and up again quickly. He passed under the trough and his head bobbed at the feet of Paul Pouliot, within reach of that one's hands. Pouliot needed but to bend over and drag the man out. Instead, he stood there trembling, with his jaw hanging down and his eyes like glass.

This was but a moment. Then Jacques fils a Tobie, a big and dare-devil habitant, leaped to the wooden trough and let himself drop into the water, holding on with one hand and reaching out the other to Lachance.

It was a life saved, m'sieu. We pulled them in and they ran ashore for dry clothing.

The affair marked Paul Pouliot and set him apart from the men of my gang. Those who had seen him standing there trembling, told the others, and he became a coward in the minds of all. I, myself, felt that he had used his full strength of mind and body before the accident and that he no more than half knew what was happening. Certainly, when night came he was the most miserable man I have ever seen and I felt sure he would sleep in a warm room the next day.

Pouliot did not sleep in a warm room the next day. He was at the Brasserie as soon as any of us, walking as though lame in the legs and with both cheeks and his nose swollen from frost-bite. Somehow, during the night, he had found strength of will to bring himself there. His suffering made me ache; and I knew there would be more than cold to trouble him. When Jacques fils a Tobie came around the corner it happened as I feared.

"Bonjour, M'sieu de Poulet!" he shouted, and there was a great laugh. Pouliot is something like poulet, which means chicken. So you see, m'sieu, the rough wit of the habitant had struck upon a name that tickled the fancy of the men. All that day, and for a long time thereafter, Pouliot was "Paul the Chicken."

BUT Paul the Chicken made no answer to the many things my men said to him. That second night his legs could hardly carry him ashore, but on the third morning there seemed to be less stiffness in his walk and he held his shoulders back. He took a hand at hard work with the others and, after a few more days, he was doing his share. Moreover, the men, all save Jacques fils a Tobie, grew tired of taunting him. The habitant never let pass a chance to call Paul the Chicken by that name. Yet I do not think he knew he was a bully. He was strong and full of life, like a great animal, and he amused himself without thinking at all of right and wrong.

The days passed and grew into weeks and it was marvelous to see the change taking place in the little barber of the Rue de la Fabrique. At length he stopped coughing altogether. Those devilish red spots went away from his cheeks and his face became brown all over. He filled out, and five years dropped away from him. He walked with a swing to his body and his eyes were clear, clear, like wells of water. I was very glad.

"M'sieu Dugal," he said one day, finding me alone. "You have saved my life. I shall live—and now I am a man!"

"Not I." His words had been pleasant to hear, but one must speak the truth. "You saved yourself—with the help of le bon Dieu!"

"I will not argue that," he answered me. "At least, you are my true friend. Think of it, M'sieu Dugal! Sometime, perhaps, I can marry and there will be little children without the curse of sickness upon them! For I have been to a doctor in Quebec and he says that two years more out-of-doors will put me beyond all fear!"

"Good! I will see that you have the work to do!"

"But no!" He hesitated, and bitterness came into his voice. "It would be better not to work with these same men again. They will never forget the day Lachance went into the water!"

"Poof!" I cried, affecting great astonishment. "Are you still thinking of that?"

"Always, m'sieu!" he said, soberly. "Always!"

THEN others came and I had no chance to say more; for I wanted to show him the folly of remembering a weakness more than long enough to profit by it.

Not long after the day when Pouliot spoke to me thus, we left an old cutting. Both Jacques fils a Tobie and he had been working there, and as I walked along behind the men and teams going away from that place, it came to me that neither of them was in sight. I looked back, and saw nothing. But there was a big pile of broken ice cakes beside the cutting, and a feeling that something might be wrong behind that pile made me turn and run toward it.

I peered around one end of the pile, and stopped quickly. Pouliot and Jacques fils a Tobie were facing each other; the big habitant with a grin. But my little barber was not amused.

"You have called me Paul the Chicken too much," he said. "Now you've got to fight!"

"Sacre!" laughed Jacques. "It will not be a fight, little chicken!"

At that Pouliot leaped for him. Now, the barber had become strong in the arms and back, with much bending up and down over an ice-saw, but he did not stand higher than the shoulder of the man who had tormented him; and that one had muscles hardened through a lifetime. Yet with the odds as they were, my barber staggered the habitant and struck half a dozen blows that must have made his head sing.

Jacques fils a Tobie bellowed like a bull, with surprise and pain and rage. He took hold of Paul Pouliot and lifted him up. Then, before I could get around the corner of that pile of ice, he had run to the open water of the cutting and plunged the little man in, all over from head to heels. He flung him sprawling over the ice.

At that instant I reached Jacques fils a Tobie and you may be sure, m'sieu, that I cuffed him with great pleasure. I jammed him up against those ice blocks and put my knee in his stomach and talked to him earnestly, cuffing now and (Continued on page 825)

GARDENING UNDER WATER

by HENRY C. ROWE

Illustrations by G. W. HARTING

THE DITTY of our childhood that told of Mary's garden, where there were "Silver bells and cockle shells and pretty maids all in a row," was not so remote from actuality, in at least one respect, as we are apt to think. If we substitute for cockle shells the name of that other and more notable bivalve, the oyster, we won't be far from the mark. For, nowadays, oysters are grown in gardens. Their culture has become a science; their life history, from the time the seed is sown to the date of their appearance on the table, is a fascinating romance.

The popular idea of the source of oysters is that they grow wild in creeks, estuaries, etc., and that men go out in little boats and catch them, a bushel or two at a time, somewhat as clams are caught. As a matter of fact, not one bushel in one thousand of mature oysters ready for market, is found growing naturally. This applies to the product of the waters of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, and in a lesser degree, to those of Delaware, Maryland and Virginia.

Oyster farming is now a productive industry that may well be compared to grain farming on the enormous grain fields of the West, where tens of thousands of acres are sown and harvested under one management. The growing of oysters, however, is a far more complicated, expensive, and hazardous enterprise than is the growing of grain.

A large oyster farm comprises many thousand acres of land from fifteen to seventy-five feet below the surface in great bodies of salt water, such as Narragansett, Peconic, Gardiners, Great South, Delaware and Chesapeake Bays. Often, these farms are situated several miles from shore, so that a strong field glass is required in order to identify objects on the distant land, that serve for ranges in locating the boundaries of the oyster farms.

THE small boats used in the catching of wild oysters would be absolutely useless in the propagation, planting or harvesting of the crops on these great deep-sea farms. The grounds are, in some instances, several miles in extent, and steamers and gasoline boats are employed in their exploitation. Some of the larger steamers are more than a hundred and fifty feet in length, and thirty feet wide. They average 8,000 bushels of oysters per day, in water thirty to sixty feet deep, or, in other words, as deep as a six-story building is high.

Between catching the few wild oysters that grew naturally, in the way that clams and escallops are now caught, and a great productive industry, there is as complete a revolution as that from the village smithy of former days, where articles of iron work for use in the farmhouse or the field were made, to the modern hardware factory, employing thousands of skilled operatives, and using steam or electric power for every operation where it is practicable to apply it.

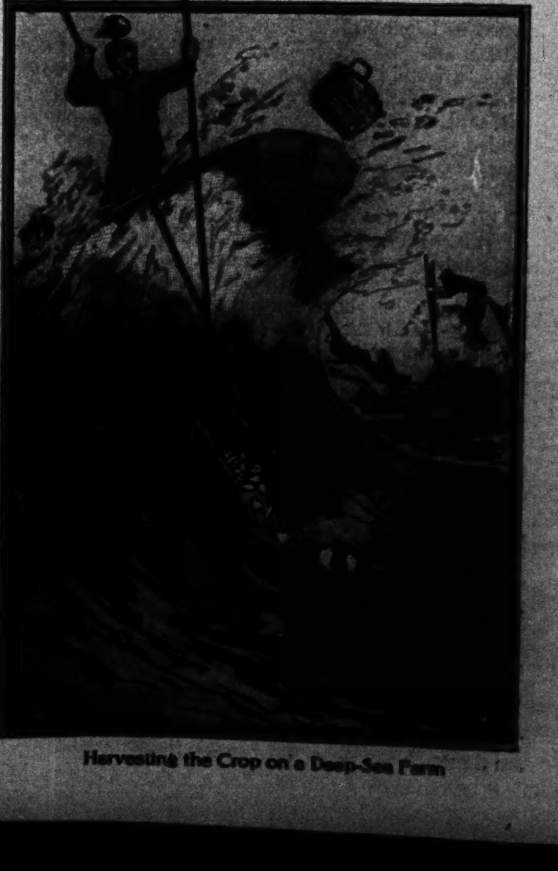
As an illustration, one of the large steamers above described, goes out in the morning at seven o'clock, and by four or five in the afternoon has caught several thousand bushels of seed oysters from the grounds where they have been artificially propagated. At five o'clock it departs for the maturing grounds a hundred and twenty miles away, where the oysters are to be grown and fattened.

The steamer reaches these distant grounds at six or seven o'clock the next morning. The oysters are gathered in by steam power; but they are shoveled back by a crew of fifteen to eighteen men. There is a double set of officers, engineers, and firemen, so that those who have managed the vessel during the day, sleep during the night, and vice versa. The steamer has comfortable living quarters for twenty-five officers and men. She cruises over the ground, while the deck hands distribute the oysters as evenly as possible over hundreds of acres.

THESE maturing grounds are situated in the great open bays often a hundred miles or more from the places where the baby oysters are propagated, and far from the sources of contamination that may have existed contiguous to the creeks, rivers, and estuaries that formerly yielded their scanty crops of wild oysters.

These great oyster farms, comprising from 5,000 to 25,000 or more acres under one management, are often situated miles from land, where the bottom is constantly swept by deep, clean currents of salt water. The use of the open waters in the great bays and sounds has also been increased by the fact, that the oyster grounds in the vicinity of cities and in rivers, creeks, and harbors, have been largely abandoned, and those that are in the neighborhood of such localities are now inspected by competent bacteriological experts employed by state authority.

They analyze the meat of the oysters, the liquor in the shell, and the water where they grow; and the marketing of oysters from a place that does not pass the standards established for purity, is forbidden. Then, too, the shipping firms have installed refrigerating plants and sterilizing plants, and are using many improved kinds of packages to insure the delivery of oysters in perfect condition, throughout all parts of the United States and Canada. The packing houses and equipment are also inspected by health authorities, and are open to the inspection of the public.



Harvesting the Crop on a Deep-Sea Farm

The conservation of our food products is one of the most important studies of those who are considering the welfare of the fast growing population of this continent. The propagation and culture of oysters is producing food for millions and employment for tens of thousands. The output has been so increased in recent years that the price of oysters has not advanced, while the price of meat and many other kinds of food has increased from twenty-five to forty per cent. This fact enables the intelligent housekeeper to cut the cost of living appreciably.

BUT the question may naturally be asked: How are the little oysters propagated before they are taken to other grounds for maturing, fattening, and flavoring? This is one of the vast developments of the industry in recent years. The oyster farmer, or propagator, must first acquire a title to his lands under water; otherwise, he is guaranteed no return for his heavy outlay. The agricultural farmer could not afford to plant his crops unless he was assured the right to harvest them; it is just as necessary that the oyster farmer should have the right to harvest his oysters. Therefore, laws have been enacted in many of the states, enabling those who desire to plant and to cultivate oysters to acquire title to the lands. In some states these titles are permanent upon payment for the grounds, while in other states, the authorities grant a lease for a term of years, upon payment of the rental by the oyster cultivator.

The planter having purchased or leased such grounds as he may need from the state authorities, he scrapes from the bottom, with dredges worked by oyster steamers, the trash or loose material, and the enemies of the oyster that may be occupying it. This is usually a vast labor, and involves great expense. In one case which fell under the observation of the writer, many thousands of bushels of starfish, besides a vast amount of débris, were removed from one hundred acres of oyster ground in Narragansett Bay.

After "cleaning the ground," as it is called, the oyster farmer distributes, say 500,000 bushels, of empty oyster shells over a thousand acres of sea bottom, and plants among these shells 50,000 bushels of mature oysters, to furnish the eggs and milt.

A single female oyster lays from five million to thirty million eggs during the month of June. These are expelled about the end of June in northern waters and earlier in southern waters, and are fertilized by the milt while floating. The milt is produced by the male oysters in numbers almost beyond computation.

The oyster of the multitude, meaning the moderate-sized oyster, is by all odds, the best oyster. The biggest joke ever perpetrated on the oyster-consuming public in this country is the fancy, mammoth oyster served in expensive restaurants and hotels. These bloated, unwieldy bivalves on their eight-inch shells are supposed to represent the acme of succulence, and the price deludes the diner into the belief that he must be swallowing something choice.

As a matter of fact, these pallid monsters are poor eating. The small oyster has twice the flavor, looks healthier, is healthier and yields better value for the money.

THE GIRL AT VAN GOYT'S

By VANCE PALMER

BARTLEY DEANE sat at the little table turning a glass of Dutch beer round in his fingers and beating time with his foot to the staccato sobbing of violins that was going on behind him. It was after ten, and the four-hundred-ton schooner that carried supplies for the arrowroot plantations along the coast had been in hardly more than an hour, but there was no cargo to come off that night. Deane himself was not so preoccupied as usual with thoughts about cargo, for it was his last trip. Besides, there was an altogether different worry on his mind.

"Better say nothing at all about it," said the mate abruptly.

In his voice there was a suggestion that he was a little tired of the matter. Although an American, too, he was of different build from Deane, being short and nuggety, with a round head jammed down tight on powerful shoulders. It was his forte to treat abstract things with a large casualness, and his grey eyes looked out quizzically from his red face as if wondering at the captain's scruples.

"I never intended to say anything about it," said Deane. "I've had enough experience of these Dutch authorities. They'd hold us up for a couple of months, and there'd be no end of official inquiries and meaningless bunk. But all the same——"

He hesitated. The mate chewed the end off a cheroot and struck a match on the wooden table.

"It was about the only sensible thing he ever did," he grunted.

"It was, and that's the truth," Deane assented, "but I don't like leaving it at this. He might have had relations."

"None that will worry," said the mate. "He brought a wife down from the F. M. S. or somewhere, but he treated her so badly that she left him in a month."

"That's just it," Deane cut in. "She might want to know."

The mate laughed sceptically in the lower part of his throat.

"Not on your life. She's forgotten she ever married him by now."

They smoked in silence for awhile, for the violins rose in aggressive crescendo, assisted by a piano that was dumb in three notes. A round of energetic applause came from the sleepy-eyed Dutchmen who were sitting at the little tables, drinking strange liquors, and the fat pianist on the raised platform rose and bowed, taking the handkerchief from under his collar and rubbing his hands. The three girls behind the fringe of palms listlessly rubbed their bows with resin and looked with bored eyes through the haze of cigar-smoke at the groups of drinkers, to whom their playing atoned for Van Goyt's bad liquor.

"I've got to get down to Sydney in six weeks," said Deane, "or the Burns-Philp offer to buy the schooner mightn't hold good. Otherwise I'd stay and see it out."

The mate tried to conceal the jerk of impatience that twitched his spine.

"I don't see why you're troubling your head about it," he said. "It's a matter of no account anyway."

HE yawned slightly behind his hand, for the violins had started operating again. Suddenly he rose and announced that he was going back to the schooner to turn in. But Deane sat with his half-empty glass in front of him, and there was an abstracted look in his eyes. The matter had made more impression upon him than upon the mate, for he had a finer imagination in the first place, and violence of any kind set it working hard. Besides, he was not quite sure that he was clear of all responsibility, for, if he had kept Faguet away from liquor, he might never have jumped overboard.

To be sure, the man was no great loss to the world, and no one up and down the coast would miss him for three minutes. A Frenchman from one of the old families in Hawaii, he had been cut off from his people for years, and at thirty he carried his doom in his face. On the veranda of his bungalow he lounged most of the day in his pajamas, wrapped in a drunken stupor, with the plantation going to ruin all around him. There was a report that he had married on a recent trip to Singapore, but Deane had never seen his wife.

"Anyway," he thought, "I wish the waster had died before he set foot aboard my schooner."

The first bars of a song from the platform made him switch round suddenly, for it was a ragtime he had never heard except on the gramophone he kept in his cabin. The singer was a dark girl with a red hibiscus in her hair, and something about her face riveted Deane's attention. The darkness of her eyes was accentuated by the penciling of her eyebrows and her cheeks were slightly rouged, but, in contrast to the other two girls who sat in tired passivity behind the palms, she seemed to radiate with extraordinary youth and vitality.

For the first time that evening Deane's train of thought was switched off his own affairs. He was sure that the girl was American and her presence there in that out-of-the-way seaport struck him as altogether unaccountable. He looked round at the room with its colored streamers and its air of sham gaiety, and a cold chill went down his spine. The crowd of planters, shipping clerks, and seafaring men were not listening with any attention to the song. They were blowing out clouds of tobacco-smoke and making jests about the girls on the platform, while the fat pianist surreptitiously wiped the perspiration from the back of his neck and signaled to the waiter to bring him an iced lager.

Deane fancied the girl's eyes were fixed on him curiously, challengingly. There was an interval and she came down from the platform with the others and sauntered among the tables, her chin held high as if she were contemptuous of the whole dreary business. The look on Deane's face as she passed him was too frank to be misinterpreted and there was the suggestion of a withdrawal into sanctuary in the way she sank down into the chair opposite.

"THEY'RE rather pigs," she said impulsively. "You're an American, aren't you?"

"California," said Deane laconically.

"I thought so," she said. "I watched you and the other fellow come in. I haven't spoken to a fellow-countryman for nearly two years."

"You wouldn't be likely to," he said. "Not in these latitudes."

He signaled to the waiter and she ordered coffee unenthusiastically. His quick, sailor's eyes were scrutinizing her keenly, as if trying to sum her up. In spite of her casual, easy-going manner there was no coarseness in her fiber and her voice was more refined than the atmosphere of her talk. The question that had been slowly formulating in his mind came out with a jerk.

"How do you happen to be here at all?" he said.

She gave him a long, slow look that had a touch of cynicism in it.

"Why not? Life pushes us into all sorts of places."

"Yes," he said, "but there's a limit, I guess."

Her shrug seemed to indicate that she had never found one.

"I was a soubrette in a company that started out to tour the East," she said. "We disbanded at Manila after three months of it. Until then I'd thought there was money in the East—the lot of us did."

"There is, if you know how to dig for it," said Deane brusquely, "but it takes time to learn the right way."

There was a shrewdness in her quick glance.

"H'm. I guess you've learnt that."

"Not too well," he said with a laugh. "I'm going home a little bit poorer than when I came. At least I would be if——"

He stopped suddenly. The look on her face expressed a mingled disappointment, envy, and resentment. He was astonished at the intensity of it.

"Oh, you're going home then," she said.

"I'm making down to Sydney now," he told her. "I'll get a boat from there."

Somehow the admission seemed to sever the link of sympathy that had sprung up between them. He vaguely understood the look in her eyes and reflected that it was just as well she did not know he was going home to cushioned comfort and a share in the richest shipping business in the Western States. There was a short silence and he became conscious that the men at the other tables were watching them with an unpleasant kind of interest.

"How long have you been here?" he asked suddenly.

"Only three weeks," she replied. "It seems longer."

"It would," he said shortly. "The crowd that drops in here is sometimes pretty tough. And Van Goyt's rather an old beast himself."

She shrugged her shoulders.

"One gets to expect that here. I've lost most of my illusions since I first landed at Manila...but I've learnt how to look after myself, too."

She rose and smiled, but the defiant, confident look in her eyes was not as convincing as she meant it to be. The other girls were waiting for her on the platform, and the fat pianist was turning over his music impatiently. When the first bars sounded out Deane pushed the canvas curtains aside and went out into the lighted street which was quite silent except for a knot of quarreling Chinese stokers and a few drunken sailors lurching down to their boats. He hailed a sampan at the jetty and rowed out to the schooner, which was lying a couple of hundred yards out with a lighter beside it.

But when he went to his cabin it was not to sleep, though a light wind had dissipated the day's heat. The vision of the girl, sitting there on the raised platform among the palms, made him uneasy, and the musty smell of stale tobacco and spilt liquor was still in his nostrils. So vivid was the impression she had made on him that he forgot all about Faguet, and the necessity of getting away without an elaborate series of official inquiries.

"We'll have to wait for a few days," he said to the mate next morning. "I must see about getting some cargo to make up for what we're putting off here."

The mate looked at him curiously.

"I thought you were dead anxious to get to sea again," he said.

"So I am," said Deane swiftly, "but we can't go out too light. God knows what sort of weather we may strike before we reach Sydney."

He went off along the shore-front to see the agent, but when night came he was sitting in the café chantant of Van Goyt's hotel, drinking black coffee and cognac, and trying to avoid the men he knew. Through the filmy haze of smoke the girl's eyes met his, and there was a heightened color in her cheeks that transcended the cheap effects of the paintbox. More than mere curiosity was stirred in Deane. Beyond all personal interest he had an acute feeling that a countrywoman of his had no right to be there in such company. Moreover, in spite of the frank realism of her attitude, she did not belong to the same world as the other two women, whose thin necks had lost all the roundness of youth and whose disillusioned eyes showed that they had made their bargain with life.

There was no hesitancy in the way she came up to his table during the interval: indeed, the absence of coquetry was the most amazing thing about her. It was as if she clung to frankness as to the last stronghold of her dignity. But to Deane, who had come to regard artifice as a fundamental instinct in women, this freshness was very great in its appeal. He sat looking at the way the firm lines of her throat faded into the filmy lace of her corsage, and the thought that such vital beauty was doomed to wither at this frowsy seaport he was leaving behind, jarred him like the touch of sharp steel on a raw nerve.

SO it came to pass that when five days had elapsed the schooner was still lying at her anchorage, waiting for some imaginary cargo. The mate who saw how things were going paced the still deck in impatience and swore irrelevantly at the half-caste crew. Since he had first joined Deane three years ago he had stuck to him a little closer than a brother, giving him the benefit of a quick, narrow brain and twenty years' experience of the toughest seaports in the world. And he knew that at that very port there were men so jealous of Deane and his schooner, that they would leap at the chance of getting a telling blow home. He wanted very badly to be out at sea again.

"When a man like him gets walking up and down the deck at two in the morning there's something worse than toothache the matter with him," he muttered to himself.

And still Deane lounged by day in the office of the agent, a thin Portuguese Jew, who promised him a full load, if he would only wait a week.

There was a curious conflict going on in his mind. The vision of the girl sitting in that sordid hall haunted him at night, and he could not get over the feeling that some of the responsibility rested on him. Once while they sat talking, a drunken Finn at another table broke a beer glass over the

A BUSY DAY AT THE WHITE HOUSE

By JAMES HAY, Jr.

Assistant Secretary Rudolph Forster

President Wilson and Secretary Tumulty

Assistant Secretary Thomas W. Brahany

SISYPHUS, an energetic Grecian and god-like gentleman, once acquired an everlasting reputation by getting the job of continually rolling a tremendous stone up a gigantic hill without ever reaching the top. There are in Washington today three men who have won from him all his medals, blue ribbons and fame for hard work. They roll the tremendous stone up the gigantic hill and get to the top. They are Joe, Rudolph and Tom Sisyphus—otherwise known as Joseph P. Tumulty, Secretary to the President, and Rudolph Forster and Thomas W. Brahany, Assistant Secretaries to the President.

When it comes to hard and sustained labor this modern Sisyphus family is a wonder, and only an eye-witness of the activities on a busy day in the White House offices can appreciate the remarkable results these men obtain. So gruelling is the work that Tumulty has a fixed rule of eating very lightly on Saturday evenings and Sundays and sleeping a great deal Sunday, on the theory that this gets him into good shape for the following week's work. Forster and Brahany have not yet resorted to special diets.

Joe, Rudolph and Tom are the three big middle-men who stand between the President of the United States and the hundred million people of the country, in so far as the wishes of the hundred million reach out to, or affect, the Chief Executive. Their work is divided each day into three classes—personal contact with politicians of every class who want to see the President on subjects of varying importance; answering the letters and telegrams that come to the President from all sources; and meeting private citizens who approach the White House with ideas, requests and proposals as numerous as the sands of the seven seas.

TO the average business man who is driven frantic by the tinkle of the telephone at his elbow, the telephone activities of the three secretaries would appear as appalling and incredible. On a really busy day between five hundred and six hundred telephone calls come to the White House offices. There are, at the same time, about one hundred and seventy-five outgoing calls. There are, leading into the White House, four telephone trunk lines, a special line connecting with long distance, a special line from each of the eight executive departments of the government and two special lines from the Capitol building. Of these seven hundred or more telephone calls, a big majority are handled by the three men. They come from every imaginable source, ranging from a Cabinet officer to a citizen desiring an invitation to one of the state receptions given by the President.

Each one has to be treated with accuracy, courtesy and dispatch. That is, accuracy is always the object; but sometimes it is difficult. Not long ago a visitor to Washington got one of the switch-board operators and made known his desire to be invited to a White House function. He was exceedingly garrulous.

"I'll connect you with Mr. Brahany," said the operator.

"No," retorted the visitor, "I don't want to bother Mr. Brahany. I'll tell it to you, and you can tell it to him."

This was during the morning hours when telephone calls are thickest. The operator listened to the flow of the other's conversation for one minute, "plugged out" and proceeded to connect up other calls. Every now and then he would "cut in" on the wire held by the visitor. The visitor kept on talking, an uninterrupted stream that got nowhere. At the end of twenty-three minutes the operator cut in for the last time and said crisply:

"All right, sir. I'll make a memorandum to tell Mr. Brahany what you say."

"Thank you very much," replied the other. "I appreciate your patience greatly."

Such long-winded calls, however, are rare. If they came often, the White House system of operation would be put out of business.

During the four days following the President's letter to Senator Stone regarding the Chief Executive's stand on the submarine war situation, telegrams addressed to the President came in at the rate of between fifteen hundred and two thousand a day. The letters during the same time averaged a thousand a day. All these letters and telegrams are read by the clerical force in the office. They are classified as accurately as possible. Sometimes ten or fifteen are pinned in one package because they say the same thing and come from about the same sort of people.

All of them go to the secretaries. More than half of them have to be read in full, or in a brief form, by Forster and Brahany. Some of these are then passed on to Tumulty. The President has less letter writing to do than any of the secretaries—although his exertion along this line is ample. It is impossible for the Sisyphus trio to dictate answers to such a mass of correspondence, but they have to see that the proper replies are sent. Every clerk in the office can read Forster's shorthand notes. Tumulty and Brahany use longhand.

All three of them, when they do not dictate the replies in full, "indicate" them by putting a few words on the upper right-hand corner of each letter or telegram. Such "indications" regarding communications on any subject read as follows:

"President appreciates interest and thanks cordially."

"Message received, President regrets incident closed."

"President thanks for expression of opinion."

"Suggestion noted and will be carefully considered by President."

But there is one thing which the secretaries can not side-step in the matter of correspondence. They can abbreviate their dictation as has just been described, but they have to sign their letters with their own hands. There is no rubber-stamp business for the President or any of the three secretaries when it comes to signing letters and public documents. It has been calculated that the President and his secretaries sign their respective names in ink to letters and official documents more than a million times a year.

Forster has been on his White House job for nineteen years. I asked him whether or not the signing of letters was a great nuisance.

"You can figure it out for yourself," he replied with that admirable patience to which he has been schooled by long contact with the American public. "Yesterday afternoon I nearly had pen paralysis."

Brahany and Forster answer personally more letters and telegrams than does Tumulty. The Secretary to the President deals generally with those which have to do with the most important matters of state and political appointments. All that he can not handle are sent forward for the President's own dictation and signature.

COMMUNICATIONS of every description are coming to the President nowadays. One received the other day read:

"Honored Sir: I am an ardent believer in national prohibition. I also approve of the Harrison drug act, which makes it hard for would-be morphine fiends to get the drug. But I am a great sufferer from neuralgia. Nothing but a small quantity of morphine can give me any relief. Down here in Texas the doctors won't give me as much as I need. I shall appreciate it if you'll see to it that some arrangement is made whereby I can get the only medicine that does me any good."

Another read:

"Your Excellency: Since you are such a wonderful historian yourself and must, therefore, take a great interest in having historical books go before the public, I take the liberty of asking your kind offices in bringing to the attention of some good publishing house my work on, etc."

And so they run. One who has been "faithful to the interests and traditions of the Democratic party" wants an appointment as postmaster. A bride desires an autographed photograph "for good luck." German sympathizers by the hundreds offer their unsolicited and verbose advice. The pro-ally people send in their equally unsolicited and verbose suggestions.

The White House Executive Offices

Hundreds congratulate the President on a speech he has made or a letter he has written. Others point out that he is entirely wrong in this position or that. Somebody wants additional legislative encouragement for the Audubon Society. Somebody else has a pet charity which could be helped immensely by the President's "personal interest." A heart-broken mother wants her son pardoned from a federal penitentiary. An ambitious father desires his son to be given a commission in the army. The variety of the letters is indescribable.

On top of these come letters from Senators, Representatives, national committeemen, state leaders, church dignitaries, men of the largest business affairs and philanthropists with international reputations. All these must receive answers commensurate (Continued on page [illegible] then to make sure that he took heed. I think he understood that he was not to call Pouliot "the Chicken" again, if he wanted to keep his ribs sound.

Jacques went to his work growling; although I am sure he had no bloody plans for revenge in his head, such as you read of in stories. He was neither very good nor very bad, and he did not understand at all how his words had been like a knife turned around and around in the soul of Paul the Chicken.

Pouliot had run ashore for dry clothes and I sought him out, wishing to know if the ducking had broken his spirit. The freezing water of the Saint-Laurent gnaws to the bone; it stops a man's very heart from beating.

"Do you feel a chill?" I asked, searching his face.

"No!" His eyes gleamed. "I am too strong for that! And I am going to grow stronger; for some day I shall put that devil, Jacques fils a Tobie, into the water, so he will know how it feels to go head under. I hate him!"

I was sorry to have him say that. Paul Pouliot, who had grown to be more of a man daily since he had conquered himself that first time, was in danger of losing all he had gained. I do not mean his health, m'sieu; I mean the character he had done such great things to build since the day he left a customer half shaved in the barber shop.

After the fight he began a new battle. He fought with himself and I, knowing him well, could not say whether he was winning or losing. At times he looked at Jacques fils a Tobie with hate; at times he seemed to have forgotten the ducking in the Saint-Laurent. But in other things Paul Pouliot continued to live each day better, always ready to help and always doing a little more than his share. It was as though he were trying to pay a debt to le bon Dieu for the life that had been restored to him.

At length Pouliot was received on a certain footing in my gang; no man respected him for courage and yet each gave him credit for his good will. The name of Chicken seemed to have been forgotten by the men; yet I have always thought that Jacques fils a Tobie tormented him out of deviltry when I was not within hearing, and that these were the days when hate was strong in the eyes of the barber. So matters stood as the end of the season drew near.

One bitter day when the wind blew so hard that a man stood upon his feet with difficulty, I wished to make greater haste in the work, and so closed my eyes to a trick filled with danger; one that I had often forbidden. This trick was to leap upon a cake of ice marked out by the ice-plow and work it free while standing upon it. This was the quickest way, for a man's weight aided his strength in breaking off the cake. But it was exceedingly dangerous, for a man must jump back to the solid ice in the same instant that his cake broke off—otherwise, he would be certain of a wetting and in considerable peril of death.

Jacques fils a Tobie did this thing half a dozen times, springing into the air at exactly the right moment. The devil must have been in the man that day; for I saw him look at Paul Pouliot, who was by nature cautious, and grin each time after his feet were firmly planted on the solid ice. At last, m'sieu, my little barber tried the trick—he tried and succeeded excellently, for being of small weight he was quick upon his feet. His eyes flashed as he looked at Jacques. And then Jacques began to break every block after the same manner, as much as to say, pouf! this is nothing at all for a man to do!

THEN happened what was sure to happen. Jacques fils a Tobie, making a great show of carelessness, waited a second too long before he jumped. That second was the difference between safety and the shadow of death. Before a single man of us could move he was down on his knees, slipping, sprawling, clutching at that ice-cake on which he straddled, while the wind drove it rapidly toward the other side of the cutting where thin ice had formed the night before.

Half a dozen men jumped and reached out their poles, but these fell short. Jacques fils a Tobie looked at us with the fear of death in his face. His block of ice was not so big that he could rest there in safety until we found a way to aid him. It was a small piece and he was a heavy man; part of him was in the water all the time as he fought for new holds. A minute, perhaps, and his water-filled clothing and stiffening arms would end the matter.

The wind drove him against the thin ice. He managed to fling one leg upon it. It broke so quickly that he was nearly torn from that cake by which he held to life. He tried again and again, churning up water and bits of ice.

SOME of the men were tearing planks from the troughs and flinging them out, only to see the wind blow them astray. Others were trying to make a long rope from the reins of a harness; and still others were running in circles, as always at such times. I had taken a plank under each arm and started for the other side of the cutting when I chanced to look at Paul Pouliot.

His body was swaying in little false starts; each time to stop, straining. It was as though an angel were pulling him forward and the claw of the Evil One holding him back. Suddenly he leaped forward and ran, shooting past me to the very edge of safety.

Then Pouliot backed, and ran again, and when he came to the thin ice of the day before, he put his feet far apart and slid straight for the place where Jacques, whose struggles were growing less, had begun to slip deeper into the water.

The force with which Paul Pouliot had started carried him to the edge of the thin ice, where Jacques had broken it: there he stopped himself and waited while one could draw a deep breath. I had come near enough to hear, in spite of the wind, a groaning and cracking from that dangerous spot where he stood. Even then I could not see what he meant to do, for it was certain that ten pounds more weight added to his own, would carry him through.

But he had made his plan. He bent down with both hands held out, until they were a foot from the head of Jacques fils a Tobie.

"Take hold and throw yourself up!" he cried. His legs set themselves far apart. His back, made strong by much use of the big ice-saw, straightened up quickly. Jacques, held by the wrists, was snapped from the water with sufficient force to send him sliding a dozen feet—within reach of my hand. He was saved.

But that instant of added weight against the soles of Paul Pouliot had driven him through the ice, which broke all around him, and he struggled in the water while the block to which Jacques fils a Tobie had held floated away.

I cursed, m'sieu, meaning to pray for the little barber who was giving up his life, and flung myself out on my stomach with a plank under each arm. Just as the ice broke beneath me I saw the face of Paul Pouliot. He smiled! And went down!

They had a bad time getting me out, those men of mine, for their wits had utterly left them. But for the plank, I might have stayed in the Saint-Laurent. Jacques fils a Tobie was sitting on the ice when I got my feet under me again. He was crying, for which I thought very well of him. I made him run ashore with me.

Paul Pouliot, the Chicken, was not seen again.

Thus, m'sieu, a man took great pains to save his life and then threw it away lightly, as one does a half-smoked cigarette. It seemed to me there was true greatness in being able to do that thing. But it followed from the fact that he had lifted himself by the boot-straps of his soul. He was doomed to die well, if chance offered, from the moment when he conquered himself.

Barrett on Advertising

JOHN BARRETT, the genial head of the Pan-American Union in Washington, was being heckled about his propensity for self-advertisement. He took it in good part, but retorted:

"The fellow who tries to attract business without advertising, is like the fellow who throws his sweetheart a silent kiss in the dark. He knows what he is doing, but nobody else does."

Any Fruit

As Shortcake Needs Crust

Has anyone who reads this failed to try Puffed Wheat or Rice with fruit? If so, a surprise awaits you.

Fresh fruit, like sauce, is better with a crust.

That's the reason for tarts and pies and shortcakes—to mix a cereal crust with fruit.

With fresh fruit the way to do it is to mix Puffed Grains in the dish. Then you get the blend—a fragile, flaky, toasted crust that makes the fruit doubly-delightful.

Almond-Flavored Bubbles

Puffed Grains in the making get terrific heat. And that gives them a nut-like taste.

They are steam-exploded—puffed to eight times normal size. That makes them thin and crisp.

Never was a crust so flaky, so porous. And never one with such fascinating taste.

Corn Puffs—Bubbles of Corn Hearts—15c

Modern housewives, more and more, are serving grain foods in this way. Puffed Grains are made by Prof. Anderson's process. Every food cell is exploded. The whole grains are fitted for easy, complete digestion.

Puffed Wheat is 100 per cent of the wheat. White flour is but 40 per cent. In Puffed Wheat, with its blasted food cells, every atom feeds. So with Puffed Rice.

Make them more than breakfast dainties. Serve them in every bowl of milk. Let hungry children eat them dry like peanuts.

There is no other way to make wheat or rice into foods that compare with these.

Note the doctor when he deals with wounds. Note how he makes sure of sterile dressings—how he keeps them wrapped.

B&B Adhesive Plaster.

Get the B&B products, because they are made to keep on hand, and because they are double-sure.

B&B Cotton and Gauze are twice sterilized, once after being sealed. They are made under hospital conditions to meet hospital requirements.

They are packed in protective packages. B&B Arro Cotton is packed in germ-proof envelopes. So is B&B Handy-Fold Gauze. None is unsealed till you use it.

B&B Cotton also comes in Handy Packages. You cut off only what you want, leaving the rest untouched.

These protections may be vital to you sometime.

B&B Adhesive Plaster is made for surgery, but it has a thousand uses. It is rubber coated, and it sticks to anything dry. Any article made of any substance can be mended with it. Hot water bottles, lawn hose, tool handles, etc. Applied to flesh it doesn't irritate. Rolls of many lengths—10 cents up.

B&B Formaldehyde Fumigators are made twice the usual strength. This makes them double sure. Simply light the wick and close the doors. Use after any contagious disease, or before occupying any strange house.

Be as careful as your doctor. In these important things insist on B&B standards.

with their titles and dignity. If the writer is a doctor, he must be addressed as "My Dear Doctor." If he has been a former member of Congress, his name must have prefixed to it the distinctive title, "Honorable." If the letter is from a woman of prominence, it would never do to address her as "Miss" if she is really "Mrs.", and vice versa.

Consequently, the three secretaries must know right off the bat something about the histories of all the people who "count" in the nation or in their various states, communities or professions. They must know also something about the personal relations or the lack of personal relations between the President and each writer. In many cases, when either Tumulty or Forster or Brahany dictates a letter for the President's own signature, he must know exactly how the President is accustomed to addressing the man or woman in personal conversation. There are, by the way, only three men in the world whom the President calls by their first names. They are "Joe" Tumulty himself; Senator "Billy" Hughes of New Jersey, and "Tom" Pence, secretary of the Democratic National Committee. He calls Mr. McAdoo, his son-in-law, "Mac."

I asked Brahany how he and his associates found time to dictate or "indicate" the answers to the letters and telegrams.

"We do it whenever we get the chance; a few minutes here, an hour there," he replied. "We have to do it when we haven't other things to do. Somehow, we seem to be able to keep the work of this sort up to date."

Curiosity as to the time found for dictation was prompted by observation of the time devoted to receiving callers. On a busy day in the White House offices the callers number easily 250 people. Every one of them talks to Brahany or Forster or Tumulty, or sometimes to two of them. They include all classes and conditions of life, politicians, private citizens, souvenir hunters, job seekers, self-elected advisers. There are delegations from states to urge a prominent man for appointment to a big job; delegations from cities to ask that the President speak in those cities; delegations from counties to request certain favors for those counties.

Some of these high-hatted groups either have to be ushered into the President's office or have to have an appointment made for them to see him later. The secretaries have to see them all and decide exactly which ones can be kept from taking up the President's time without any subsequent disastrous political consequences.

MANY Senators and Representatives are satisfied to leave their affairs in the hands of Mr. Tumulty. The President has established his reputation in Washington for the expeditious dispatch of conversations relating to patronage and political preferment. For this reason, if for no other, many of the statesmen figure that they have a better chance for putting over their various requests by talking to the secretary or one of the assistants.

Frequently, if a man, prominent in the business or political affairs of a state, insists on seeing the President, when the President's time is already taken up, one of the Sisyphus trio has to devote a lot of his time and a great deal of diplomacy to explaining the situation to the visitor. Incidentally, it requires real diplomacy to keep out of the President's presence men and women who have made special trips to Washington for the sole and express purpose of seeing the President.

Of all the men of any class whatever who call at the White House on business, the star performer in politeness and consideration is Senator J. Hamilton Lewis of Illinois. The Senator is an unusually busy and conscientious man. The wishes of his constituents are commands. And, since Illinois has a population worth bragging about, he frequently appears at the White House.

"You really must excuse me for bothering you," he generally begins his remarks to one of the trio, "but it seems to be my fate to have to bother people always. Particularly today, I have had to bother a great many people. I shall take up only a few seconds of your time, if you will permit me."

The type of man who uses up most time, is he who may be described as the second-rate or third-rate politician. He is at neither the top nor the bottom. He is, however, as a general rule, tremendously impressed with his own importance and his own value. It is not often that he goes to Washington and has the opportunity to tell his story. When he does get the chance, he tells it in detail and at length.

Occasionally a sweet-faced old lady, dressed in the style of long ago, enters with timid mien and advances her request. Generally, she is the granddaughter of some great man, or the great-grandniece of some other much greater man. She has fallen on lean and hungry days, and the pride she feels in descent from the great, impels her to the belief that the government owes her a living. Naturally, she expects the President to set aside the civil service regulations and to give her a position in the government. In passing, it may be remarked that some of the stories told by these dear old ladies have so impressed the secretaries and the President, that they have done what was asked.

NECESSARILY, newspaper correspondents are frequent callers. Every day at least twenty are in the White House offices. Sometimes there are as many as a hundred and fifty in one day. Usually, this larger number is reached only when some authoritative statement touching a great national or international question is to be issued by the President or Mr. Tumulty.

When President Wilson first took office, he made it a rule to receive the corps of Washington correspondents every Tuesday morning at ten o'clock. When he returned to the Capitol last fall, however, he was too busy to keep up the practice, and he adopted the rule of seeing a newspaper man only when an appointment had been made or some special occasion arose. Since this change in his schedule, practically all the news that has come out of the White House has come through the secretaries. It is safe to say that Mr. Tumulty exercises a more powerful and a more widespread influence on the news columns of the American press today than any other man in the United States.

NOT long ago a bride and groom, having been married in Washington at ten o'clock in the morning, entered the White House offices at eleven. They approached Mr. Brahany, whose Irish heart always responds nobly to the voice of romance.

"We want to have our photograph taken with the President today," said the confused bridegroom, who bore a letter of introduction to the President from a member of the Democratic National Committee. "We want the photograph of the President and us to insure us happy lives and good fortune. We'd like to have it taken now."

Mr. Brahany ran his hand through his raven locks and thought desperately. At that moment the President was in conference with a member of the Cabinet and two Senators. Brahany had an inspiration. Moreover, the President is somewhat of a busy man himself—always.

"It's impossible for the President to come out," Brahany explained. "But that needn't interfere with your plan. Mr. Tumulty represents the President in all things. He's particularly fine in representing him for good luck. Have your picture taken with him."

And Tumulty, also Irish, relaxing his grasp on political matters, rushed bareheaded to the asphalt in front of the offices and was photographed with the bride and groom.

Taking it by and large, Joe, Rudolph and Tom Sisyphus, laboring for the biggest corporation in the world, the United States government, are the hardest worked men in the country while the President is in Washington. No corporation in private business would think of putting upon three men the amount of work, the mass of detail and the varied responsibilities borne by this trio. The high tension under which they work, the mingling of complaints, requests and demands inflicted upon them by word of mouth and by wire, and the multiplicity of responsibilities they have to assume make up a tremendous burden.

"Meadow sweet —Forest fresh"

(This phrase won the $250 Third Prize for best 7th Point Suggestions)

The sweet sap of tropical Sapota Trees is boiled to a sterilizing heat. It is then strained carefully into clean, maple trays to cool.

Two of Nature's saps sweeten your Sterling Gum. One is the sap of the Sugar Cane. The other is the pure syrup of Indian Corn.

The flavors are two. One is the sap of the Peppermint Plant. The other is the sap of the Cinnamon Cassia Bush.

Throughout the making, a clean white glove covers every clean hand which comes anywhere near the gum which later comes to you.

Seven points of superiority make Sterling a better chewing gum:

Point 1—Crowded with flavor
Point 2—Velvety body—NO GRIT
Point 3—Crumble-proof
Point 4—Sterling purity
Point 5—From a daylight factory
Point 6—Untouched by hands

Country Town Sayings

By Ed. Howe, of Atchison

WHEN a man is discharged, his wife thinks it was because he was too honest to suit his employer.

After a woman passes thirty, it doesn't make much difference how old she is.

If you can't do anything well yourself, be a critic.

One reason some actors change their names, is that their acting is so bad they don't want people to know who they are.

People don't seem to be homesick as much as they formerly did.

Too many men, when asked for an opinion, try to decide in favor of all parties concerned.

There are no new arguments in love and politics.

The wages of sin are paid by the women; the men owe it.

When a man is uneasy himself, he asks everybody else to have confidence.

What a fool a man can be when he tries his best to be wise!

I have noticed that when a man is economical, and saves money for a rainy day, Providence usually sends one.

A certain amount of humiliation is necessary to keep a man where he belongs.

I sometimes think that people don't know any more after having had experience than before.

Every man I ever knew had ambition, but only a few had application with it.

EVERY ONE knows how extremely difficult it is to "break" a child or a grown person of the so-called habit of being left-handed. After experiments and systematic attempts that have covered more than twenty years, made by experts, in the study and training of children, the result has led to the belief that the reason left-handed people are not good talkers, is because the power of the hands is intimately associated with the unfolding of the language sense, and that the cerebral centers which regulate language are located on the left side.

In other words, that part of your brain which controls your speaking ability is in the left side of your head, in relation to the centers which regulate the control of your right arm and hand. And so, if this decision, made after a score of years of study, is quite correct, most of us have been wrong in supposing that a child becomes left-handed solely through accident or because it was allowed to use its left hand too much. Some are even so superstitious as to believe that if the first thing put in a baby's hand is put in the left hand, the child will become left-handed, and vice versa.

But now it seems that left or right handedness is really due to the development of the right or left side of the brain. Thousands of human skeletons have been carefully examined and this has demonstrated that in all cases where the right arm is better developed than the left there is evidence of a correspondingly increased development of the left side of the brain.

This is really not as complicated as it seems. If the left side of your brain is better developed your right arm will be stronger. It seems that it is the development of either one or the other sides of your brain that regulates the strength of your arm.

Speech being controlled in a section of the brain just on the left side, the result is logically that if your brain is better developed on the right side your ability to talk eloquently is not so great as it would be if the left side of your brain were stronger. You are also inclined to be left-handed with a stronger section of the brain on the right side. Consequently, left-handed people are not good speechmakers.

This Editor Had a Corn

A Curious Incident

A magazine editor at one time refused the Blue-jay ads.

He said that nothing could end corns as gently and as quickly as we claimed.

But he went south to play golf. Loose golf shoes brought a corn. He thought of Blue-jay, and one night applied it.

The corn never pained again. In two days it disappeared. The next day he wrote his office to insert the Blue-jay ads.

So with you. If you have a corn it proves that you are skeptical. But soon or late you are going to find out Blue-jay, as millions have already.

Then your corns will go. And never again will you let a corn pain twice.

Why not try it now?

head of his companion and there was a confusion of overturned chairs as men sprang up in anticipation of a fight. Deane noticed the girl's face whiten in sheer dread of physical violence. It was all over in a moment, for the big, commanding Van Goyt came running in to restore order, but Deane was afflicted by a sudden revulsion for the latent barbarity that was always sleeping under cover of the tinkling glasses and sobbing violins.

"Why do you stay in a place like this?" he demanded impulsively.

She looked at him curiously, and her young face became hard with a pitiless realism that made him seem like a romantic boy.

"What do you take me for?" she said. "Do you think I'd stay here a day if I could get out of it?"

For a moment he did not comprehend the real significance of the situation.

"But why can't you?" he said. "Sydney—any place—would be better than this. There are decent shows there that would give you a chance, and sooner or later you could get back home."

A gleam of ironic humor flitted across her face.

"Did you ever have to look twice at a dollar?" she asked dryly. "It would cost me a hundred-and-fifty to get down there, and I've got what I stand up in."

It was her tone even more than her words that showed him the naked reality of the situation. The repulsion he felt for the place with its colored streamers, its sensuous music, and its empty laughter, seemed merely trivial compared to her own. He thought about it that night as he stood leaning over the rails of the silent schooner listening to the plash of black, velvety water against the hull and watching the faint lights flicker from the shore. Now that he was leaving the East behind him, he could pierce its meretricious glamour and see something of the cruel, stony heart that pulsed beneath.

Cruelty was the essence of it, he felt; the ruling principle. It drugged men's senses with its garish beauty and then robbed them of all the codes of honor they had put between themselves and their appetites, turning them into beasts of prey. Once or twice in the girl's eyes he had seen the fluttering fear of a hunted thing, and he could guess pretty well what it meant. Vague, misty plans swept through his mind and the necessity for action quickened the courses of his blood.

THE next night Van Goyt was walking up and down between the tables and something in the sour, suspicious look he gave Deane, strengthened the latter's purpose. An hour later he said to the girl decisively:

"It's no use. I'm not going to go away and leave you among this crowd. My schooner is beating out in a day or two and I could give you a passage as far as Sydney."

She gave him a look of half-distrust and her breath seemed to catch for a moment in her throat.

"You're having a game with me," she said.

"I'm in dead earnest," he reiterated. "I never was more so in my life. It's for you to choose—no, I don't even allow that. You've simply got to get out of this, and you can trust me."

She hesitated and then her hand stole across the table and touched his palm.

"You're white," she said indistinctly. "That's all I can say. . . . But even if you weren't, I believe I couldn't help taking you at your word now."

Van Goyt, passing up and down the passage with his shaven chin creased in three folds on his chest, did not hear the words, but he was convinced that something unusual was going on. In the depths of his soul he disliked Deane. The big, brusque American had never been a good customer until now, and it was not in the interests of the house that he should monopolise the same girl evening after evening. The commercial part of his mind put the situation in definite terms, yet it was not of business alone that he thought.

In the brain of the fat pianist the same vague suspicions were taking shape, but both men were lacking in imaginative energy and could not visualize the possibility of swift action. The schooner "Marquette" on which for three years Deane had lavished his money and his pride, was a faint blur on the skyline before either of them realized what had happened. Then when the Malay boy was lighting the Chinese lanterns in front of the canvas concert-hall, it became known that the American girl had gone for a row in one of the harbor dinghies and had not come back.

That she was wise in her secrecy, was proved conclusively enough by the look on the faces of the two men when they learned the truth. Both were violent men, with large vocabularies and little power of restraint. But wrapped in Deane's oilskins the girl was leaning over the rails of the poop, and looking through a haze of mist and flying spray at the receding lights, that for her were like the phosphorescence in some nightmare swamp from which she had escaped. A sharp, cold wind was rising, and the cordage creaked and rattled with the music of a cleaner and more vital world.

Deane, standing by silently, his mind full of vague emotions, was suddenly aware of a convulsive movement of her shoulders. It was more than he could bear. Strung up all afternoon to a pitch of tensity, he had made up his mind to keep aloof from her till port was reached, but now all resolutions were overwhelmed by the tide of feeling that swept over him. He put a protecting arm around her.

"Don't!" she said jerkily, drawing away from him.

In the dim light of the binnacle-lamp he caught a glimpse of her face. It was filled with that wild, frightened look that he had seen one night at Van Goyt's, and now it cut him like a knife. Then she took him, too, for one of the sleek, preying things she had so often encountered.

"You don't understand, girlie," he said swiftly. "I'm not that sort of man. I love you; I want to protect you. There's a Lutheran sky-pilot I know in a port three days from here. If you gave me the word, we could call in there and get things fixed up. Can't you trust me?"

She said a little bitterly, "I might. But the trouble is, I'm married already."

To Deane the quiet words had almost the force of a hammer-blow. His breath caught with a snap in his throat.

"And you didn't tell me before?"

Her face had become blank and lifeless, denuded of all expression.

"I ought to have," she admitted, "but I know men. And I wanted to get away from here."

It was the frank realism of her attitude that checked any indignation that might otherwise have welled up in him. The world she had moved in had taught her a bitter kind of wisdom.

"And you thought I'd have acted differently, if I'd known?"

"I wasn't sure," she said. "I didn't want to take risks. Would you have done all you've done for me, if I'd sported a wedding-ring?"

The directness of the question caught Deane in a weak spot.

"I mightn't have let myself love you," he evaded.

"That's just it," she said. "I didn't want to hurt you—but I wanted you to get interested. Women don't get a proper chance to be straight with men—not in the East here."

She sat down on a bollard, resting her chin in her hands, and there was something very pitiful about her drooping figure. Deane was conscious that he had never loved her so deeply as at that moment. There was a long silence between them.

"Where were you married?" he asked at last, gently.

"Up at Singapore," she said. "I'd been nearly two years in the East then, and engagements took more chasing every month, and I was tired. But I oughtn't to have married the man I did."

Deane's face was set hard, and only his eyes showed his softness.

"I don't blame you," he muttered.

She stirred slightly.

"You wouldn't if you knew what I've gone through," she said bitterly. "The man was a brute. I didn't find out till I got home to his plantation. He drank morning and night, but life was more bearable when he was hopelessly drunk. I couldn't stand it more than a month."

Two small veins stood out on Deane's forehead. A light was beginning to break in upon him.

"And you were frightened of him finding you at Van Goyt's?"

"I was frightened of every boat that came in," she said. "Your boat, too."

"H'm," he said. "You needn't have been."

"Needn't have been?" she repeated, "Why, what do you mean?"

"He's dead," said Deane laconically.

She looked up at him and the old distrust came back to her face.

"Why are you saying that now?" she asked.

"It's the truth," he replied. "You were Faguet's wife. Isn't that so?"

She rose to her feet.

"How did you know?"

"You've told me all but the name," he said. "We've called in at his place twice a year with supplies ever since I've been on this coast. And a month ago we called in for the last time. I'd always expected to find him lying dead on his veranda some day, and so I didn't get a shock. You've got no reason to shed tears over him, either."

It was not the whole truth, but it was as much as he could tell her. She was silent, but the life seemed to come back gradually to her figure and her face. From the bridge where the bullet-headed mate was walking up and down with his hands thrust deep in the pockets of his reefer jacket, came the sound of a bell striking the hour, and half-way up the mast the musical clang was answered by the faint voice of the lookout:

"All's well."

Deane glanced swiftly at the girl, but she was looking down at the dark water. Somehow the past seemed a blurred and negligible thing to him as he stood by her side feeling the pleasant life of his own boat beneath his feet. His arm stole back to her waist again protectingly. There were no words spoken, for there was no need of words.

Things You Should Know About Mosquitos

THE eggs of the mosquito are laid in water and hatched in a few days.

In from five to ten days, the larvæ, commonly called wrigglers, change to the pupa stage.

Two or three days later, the skin splits and the full-grown mosquito creeps out.

The number of eggs laid by a single mosquito varies from fifty to four hundred.

The common mosquitos lay their eggs in quiet or stagnant, fresh water, in a tomato-can, a hole in a tree, a tub in the cellar, or a quiet pond.

Mosquitos live several weeks, and some of them hibernate in the house all winter, to begin laying eggs early in the spring.

The common mosquito flies only a few hundred yards from its breeding place.

And to protect yourself against this troublesome and dangerous pest, remember these valuable hints:

Do away with all stagnant water about the place; mosquitos cannot breed without water.

Remove tomato-cans, broken bottles, old buckets, or anything of a similar nature which may catch rain water.

Examine eave spouts and exposed drains in search of standing water.

Empty the water from vases, basins, and similar out-door receptacles, at least once a week.

Water-barrels, cisterns and the like, may be covered with fine wire screen.

Permanent standing water should be covered with coal oil. The oil must make a thin film over the entire surface, preventing the wrigglers from coming to the surface to breathe. This is the only way to kill them. One ounce of oil will cover fifteen square feet of water.

Place gold-fish, minnows and sun-fish in watering troughs, lily ponds, or fountains. They will eat the wrigglers.

To rid the house of mosquitos, fumigate it with sulphur or pyretrum powder. It will stupify them. When they fall to the floor, they should be swept up and burned.

Pyretrum powder burned out-of-doors will keep mosquitos away.

Expectant Mothers Need Strength and Vigor

If ever there is a time in a woman's life when her health and vitality should be built up to the highest point, it is just before baby comes. The promotion of perfect nutrition and the maintaining of nervous poise are also important provisions for the approaching ordeal of happy, healthy motherhood.

Additional Nourishment is Required at This Time

The expectant mother must in many instances have additional nourishment not supplied by ordinary foods. She also needs plenty of sound, refreshing sleep at this critical period. Frequently sound sleep is not possible because of impaired digestion and nervous debility. It is on that account that Pabst Extract, The "Best" Tonic is such an aid to happy, healthy motherhood. Pabst Extract is nothing but the extract of selected hops and choicest barley malt fortified with calcium hypophosphite and iron pyrophosphate. It bears the endorsement of thousands of physicians.

This liquid food is welcomed and retained by the weakest stomach and stimulates the digestive fluids. That is why Pabst Extract creates a desire for and aids the assimilation of the extra supply of food called for by the double burden of motherhood. The lupulin of hops has a soothing effect on the nerves. It quiets and strengthens them and promotes sound sleep.

An Ideal Preparation for Nursing Mothers

Pabst Extract is particularly beneficial to nursing mothers because it seems to act directly upon the lacteal glands—stimulating and supporting them. Also the rich, strength-giving food elements of barley malt, combined in just the right proportions with the tonic properties of hops, helps wonderfully in restoring the mother's physique to a normal, healthy state. Pabst Extract is also recommended for insomnia, anaemia, overwork, nervousness, dyspepsia, old age and for convalescents.

Better than painting or staining your floors!

IT'S easy enough to beautify the floors in your home if you spend plenty of money for hardwood. But here is a suggestion that will bring beautiful floors within the financial reach of everyone. Like Real Quartered Oak Congoleum Rug Borders or "Rug Surrounds" are just as attractive as hardwood floors. Indeed, it is almost impossible to distinguish them from oak. That's because they are not cheap, painted imitations. They are reproduced direct from the wood and therefore show all the grain of the original oak.

Lie Flat without Fastening

They cling to the floor without tacking or gluing or fastening of any kind, and allow no dirt to get under them. Never bulge or "kick-up".

Light Oak Narrow Plank

Extraordinary Economy

The price of Congoleum Rug Borders is most moderate—less than one-tenth that of hardwood floors, for an equally rich effect. The 36-inch width costs 50c. and the 24-inch 40c. a yard. Prices higher in far West and Canada. Your dealer will cut any length you want.

Various Styles

Congoleum Rug Borders are made in three styles—Golden Oak, narrow plank; Light Oak, narrow plank; Golden Oak, wide plank. These styles may be had in either bright or dull finish, according to the individual taste.

Book Full of Household Hints Free

We have a handsome illustrated booklet which tells all about Congoleum Rug Borders and shows how they actually look in use. This booklet is full of money-saving facts and home-decorating hints. We will mail you a copy free on receipt of your name and address. Ask for Congoleum Rug Border Booklet.
